Nostalgia Trip

I have a blueberry-infused memory of staying on the Cape as a kid. A great-uncle, who taught chemistry at Brandeis, had a house there, and my family visited one June. I remember slapping through the screen door and hopping a borrowed bike, picking fruit and exploring low tide. It seemed so quaint compared with the Virginia shore. A fresh pie compared with a Fluff-sauced sundae.

I made it to Nantucket and Martha's Vineyard after moving here. I think I'm supposed to pick an island, to take some sort of stand like sorority or glee club, but, truly, both have their charms. I'm catching my first ferry of the season this Saturday to one and then cheating with the other at summer's end. They have the appeal of Seaside, Fla., without the element of manufactured perfection.

Despite my conversion, I can't claim to be an expert yet and, as a former travel writer, wouldn't want to set you adrift. So this issue we asked four live-there-through-the-winter locals to tell us their favorite restaurants, bars and more. Jonathan Soroff further illuminates the Vineyard, where he's vacationed for 15 years. You can't go wrong following his advice. Just apply sunscreen. All over.

SALAD DAYS

BENT OVER baby bok choy, Krishana Collins wields a sharp knife and severs several of the tulip-like brassica at the roots. "I think they're beautiful," says Collins, clopping along the rows of her rented West Tisbury plot, Bluebird Farm, in knee-high Wellies. When the 35-year-old returned to the Vineyard to try her hand at flower farming—the culmination of a childhood spent arranging bouquets for fun—she never anticipated that this veggie branch of the business would flourish. Now her Chinese cabbage, arugula, baby Swiss chard and peppery microgreens show up in local fine-dining restaurants and shops. They also keep good company with lush bunches of zinnias, dahlias, blue cornflowers and lilies at her West Tisbury farmers' market booth.

RAW TALENT

Buying a bottle of raw milk in Massachusetts is notoriously tricky. So once you find your way into Allen Healy's Chilmark barn, the transaction seems mercifully low-key. Help yourself to a half-gallon jug from the cooler and leave cash in the coffee can. Utterly unprocessed, the cream-topped, butter-colored beverage smacks of grass and hay from the adjacent pasture. Grab one of the tasty tomatoes, too.

Going Out

Island Time

Prepare to have your minds blown: Todd English's empire is expanding.

Fine, this might not come as the most unexpected news. The English brand has already reached Vongerichtian proportions, and after opening Figs at 29 Fair last year at the Summer House on Nantucket, the chef will now take over the retreat's other two restaurants. But perhaps it's time to get off your heritage high horse, foodies.

"I THINK TODD HAS ALWAYS HAD A SPECIAL PLACE IN HIS HEART FOR NANTUCKET."

"Todd has been a family friend for 30 years," says Summer House GM Christopher Karlson, whose folks own the property. "My parents had an apartment building in Charlestown next to the original Olives.... I think Todd has always had a special place in his heart for Nantucket. It was kind of a perfect marriage."

The changes include bringing a hipper element to the Summer House's Beachside Bistro. Sundays will feature poolside parties, where vacationers can enjoy bottle service and fruit de mer platters on couches and lounges. It's a taste of East Hampton on eastern Nantucket.

Above the bluff, the quintessential island experience will be preserved at the Summer House Restaurant, as will old favorites like the crab cake with mint crème fraîche ($17). Displaying the subtle transformation, the New England flavor in other dishes will skew more Mediterranean; last summer's halibut en croute is now branzino with baby squash ratatouille and pistou ($36).

"He's spent more time with us this summer than he has at any of his other places," Karlson says, reassuring those who may feel English has spread himself too thin. "He likes it here. He can be with his family. Here, no one has their hooks in him."

With so many restaurants, anyone would need a vacation.

GOOD CITIZEN

A new Fenway tavern

BROUGHT TO YOU BY the folks behind Franklin Cafe, the Citizen Public House and Oyster Bar is on schedule to open in July, according to co-owner Phil Audino. The Citizen is emphatically not another Franklin, he adds, but "a new concept: tavern meets the meatpacking district." Sounds intriguing. With about 70 seats inside and 40 outside, the restaurant will be located at 1330 Boylston St., within sight of Fenway Park.

ALREADY OPEN, Woodward Park may be the hottest spot in Boston's financial district this summer. A patio extension of the Ames Hotel restaurant, WP is open for brunch, lunch, dinner and drinks. Dishes include pork belly with pickled rhubarb and spring onions, as well as pappardelle with spring vegetables, morels and parmesan broth.

ANOTHER OUTDOOR OASIS is the new Tamo Terrace at the Seaport Hotel. It's designed to accommodate varying weather conditions, thanks to a "state of the art" umbrella system, with heating and lighting elements. There's also a retractable windscreen wall to keep your caramel-and-chili popcorn from blowing away.

WHAT'S GERMAN and serves Italian food in Oman and Australia? It's an upscale restaurant chain called Vapiano, opening its first franchise in the Northeast in our very own theater district. Dishes are prepared at exhibition-style work stations, and there's a "unique chip card payment system," which sounds complicated but apparently works at more than 30 locations worldwide.

NOT DELIVERING: The Stork Club, which debuted just last August, has folded its wings and closed its doors.

Movement of the Moment

LAST CALL TO ARMS

Save the Improper Bostonian!

It's the rallying cry of a Facebook page over 2,600 people strong. It's the goal of a petition signed by more than 700. The Dennisport bar and music venue is in trouble after almost 40 years in business, all due to a much smaller number.

This spring the Improper was served a notice saying they must cease live music and alcohol past 10:30 pm, a development that effectively neuters the bar just as the season is about to start swinging. Neighbors had written their own petition, complaining about the noise. The number of neighbors? Five.

The Improper Bostonian
626 Main St., Dennisport (508-394-7416)

"I can remember going there when I was 21, and I turned 62 this week," says Deborah Hagen, owner of the holistic gift shop next door. "You know they're there, but I can't say it's any worse than being next to any other dance bar."

The problem comes down to priggish expectations. People paid good money to live next to a party, and now they'd like you to put a sock in it. Hagen explains, "As the graying population comes over the bridge, they want to close the bridge behind them. They've forgotten what it's like to be young."

The owners have spent tens of thousands on fencing, additional staff and soundproofing, and the number of noise complaints has gone down, but at the moment the restrictions still stand. Consider this a call for support, from one Improper for another. It's an increasingly stodgy world out there. We've got to stick together.

A NOVEL SITUATION

Nick's summer-reading breakdown

SUMMER IS THE SEASON TO LET GO. You exercised for months, so now, feel free to grab that fourth hotdog. This winter, you actually watched The Blind Side, starring (Oscar-winner) Sandra Bullock. In August, wash that down with The Expendables, starring (Fulbright scholar) Dolph Lundgren. You put in the time to psychically and culturally better yourself. Summer is when you flush all that hard work down the toilet. It's awesome.

Then there's the beach read, the written word's version of the Travel Channel. You can pretend you're learning, but you're really just watching a fat man trying to keep down a seven-pound burrito.

There are principles to this form of escapism: 1) It's a throwaway. If the book falls in the Sandals pool, there are 1,000 more copies waiting at the airport; 2) The plot typically involves lawyers or lovers; and 3) I tend to stay away. I once read Jennifer Weiner's Good in Bed, and my testicles still haven't redescended.

I enjoy noir. One of my favorite authors is Ken Bruen, and in his stories, damaged men riddled with self-hatred get blackout drunk and kill each other. They're a joy.

The books of Elin Hilderbrand are the polar opposite, but just like noir, her beach reads have a formula. In her novels, beautiful people deal with unexpected love and loss against the backdrop of Nantucket. Her latest tome, The Island, focuses on Birdie Cousins and her daughter, Chess, who loses her Ivy League fiancée in a mountaineering accident. Or there's A Summer Affair, in which a car accident forces Claire Crispin to give up her dream of glassblowing. Seriously.

I sound pompous, but these novels are popular. In the public library system, more than a third of all the Hilderbrands are checked out. For Bruen? Just 17 out of more than 200.

I try to be objective about these things, but the first page in Hilderbrand's The Castaways had me cringing. In walks Sergeant Dickson, but uh-oh, he's "without his usual peppermint breeze of self-confidence." (Only in Nantucket do the cops smell like candy.) Seems Tess and Greg MacAvoy drowned, and now their close-knit group of friends is coming apart at the seams. I'd tell you more, but I barely cared myself. What kept me engaged was detecting the beach-read components.

First, everyone comes prepackaged with adjectives. Characters aren't developed as much as traced from preexisting archetypes. Thus we mourn the loss of Greg, who "had six-pack abs and the shoulders of Adonis" and a voice "somewhere between Frank Sinatra and John Mayer." I read that, and I'm glad Greg is dead. There's a palpable sense of laziness to the description, like the novel was written by someone on vacation, not for someone on vacation. This is a world where thunder sounds like "someone on the second floor was picking up large pieces of furniture and then letting them drop" and points of comparison include "the Chief was so humorless, he made Jeffrey feel like Jay Leno." (Any place where Leno is the apex of comedy isn't a place I want to visit.)

Pronouns also play an immense role. As in a Dick and Jane book, the subject of each sentence is explicitly stated and underlined; like Hilderbrand is worried we're going to get the staggering amount of six total characters all jumbled. What's worse is that the characters are endlessly thinking about one another. Delilah's mad at Tess. Phoebe loves Addison. I once decided to count the number of first names on the page I was reading. 37! After that, each page read like roll call at an elementary school for children with incredibly unimaginative parents.

Of course the biggest device is that we're constantly forced to acknowledge the drama. I'm nearly paying a compliment when I say that The Castaways reminded me of Anna Karenina, the last novel I made myself read. For 800 pages, Anna weeps and frets about which rich jerk she should spend her life with, until she finally throws herself under a train. Coincidently, the 7:10 to Moscow is my favorite character in that book.

Beach reads are about escape, but to enjoy the story, you have to go someplace unexpected. I already know how to be white and privileged. Give me switchblades. Give me renegade cops. Give me homicidal motorcycle gangs on a killing spree. And then, I can relax. ✖✖✖

TO MY NEW FRIEND FROM THE #71 BUS: Thank you for striking up a conversation with me, even if it was merely about the weather. It's people like you who make the MBTA wonderful. I wish I had stayed until we arrived at Watertown Square. Who knows what would've happened? Wet jeans

To the degenerate psychopath who felt the need to verbally assault me with obscenities:

I was minding my own business, waiting to turn left on Washington Street coming out of the Dedham Mall, when you start honking your horn at me. I put my hands up to say, "What do you want me to do? There are cars coming!" This is when you felt the need to start screaming obscene words at me. Very nice. Your mother must be very proud. Maybe you should learn how to calm the hell down and wait your damn turn. I so appreciate you calling me a c. Just think how lovely it would be when someone calls one of your female loved ones that. You're a disgusting, filthy-mouthed ahole.

I hope karma comes around and takes a huge bite out of your ass

To my guardian phone angel:

You were at the Junction in Southie on a Saturday night. While in the one-woman washroom, I sent a few text messages and absentmindedly left my cell phone sitting on top of the paper-towel dispenser. Ten minutes later, I realized my phone was missing. About to sink into a pit of despair, I reported it to the bartender who reached under the bar and, miracle of miracles, handed my cell phone back to me. There are still good people in this world. Thank you! Your forgetful friend

HEAD CASE

Mind exercises for success

WITH THE ENERGETIC positivism of personal trainers, Jeff Brown and Mark Fenske have identified various categories they call "win factors." Those include self-awareness, motivation, focus, emotional balance, memory, resilience, adaptability and brain care. The authors link these qualities with regions of the brain, such as the emotion-related amygdala, or the anterior cingulate cortex that "lights up when you need to adjust your focus." Strengthening these factors is like neurons pumping iron inside your head, with the related brain areas become bigger and more flexible. (Perhaps neuroplasticity is the new workout.) A kind of MRI can track the vital interplay between the brain and the skills promoted in these pages. London cabbies must learn 25,000 different streets, so they exercise, and therefore develop, the hippocampus, which is involved in memory and spatial navigation. The Central Park jogger, brutally raped, is an exemplar of motivation, extraordinarily dedicated, in body and brain, to the goal of recovery, with the ventral striatum and the limbic system playing their parts. Examples of famous fall-down-get-up-again people like Phyllis Diller or Whoopi Goldberg, who rose above deprivation to stardom, make the concepts sparkle. Each section offers suggestions and ideas to inspire you to achieve similarly robust goals. ***

The Winner's Brain
By Jeff Brown and Mark Fenske with Liz Neporent

"To cultivate a sense of empathy, try asking, 'What are you feeling?' instead of the typical 'What are you thinking?' You can also get creative about compassion. Read books written for the opposite gender, a different nationality, or someone on the opposite side of the fence from you on an important social issue. Take a class meant for someone in a completely different profession. Anything that allows you to walk in someone else's emotional shoes will turn the dial up on opportunity radar by broadening your perspective, making you more aware of your abilities, and expanding your emotional range."

Dining { ERIN BYERS MURRAY AND CHRIS PARSONS }

DYNAMIC DUO

Aka Bistro pairs two unlikely cuisines surprisingly well.

TAKE A GANDER Japanese meets French in spicy tuna tataki topped with foie gras.

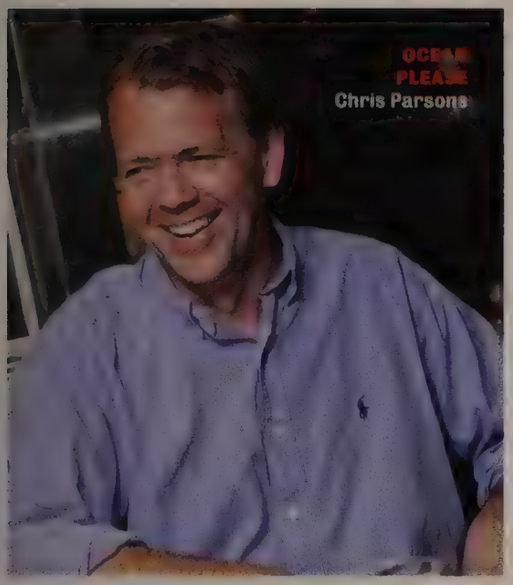
DON'T LET A TREK TO THE suburbs deter you from a great meal. Just ask Chris Parsons, chef/owner of Winchester's Parsons Table. After dinner with him at Aka Bistro, a dual-concept sashimi bar and French brasserie, I agreed that some trips merit the mileage.

It took Parsons a few years to lure customers to his original restaurant, Catch, but he eventually captivated both urban- and suburbanites with his take on New England seafood. This spring, he reconceived the compact storefront as Parsons Table, a more casual joint—and diners continue to gather. "It's still in a lot of ways a destination restaurant, but we've found that it's really about the community around us," he said.

Aka Bistro seems to have had the same realization. Local families and couples filled the dining room, as a few curious travelers made their way to the winding bar. We found two seats there and introduced ourselves to executive chef/co-owner Chris Chung. To our right, the open bistro kitchen cranked at full blast, while Chung's station remained quiet and calm.

We handed him the reins for the first half of our meal, ordering a seven-course omakase ($85) from the chef-selected menu ($70-$130). A parade of sashimi followed, moving from subtle to more aggressive spices and flavors, eventually ending with a few torched and lightly cooked selections.

As we washed down mignonette-marinated Kumamoto oyster shooters, Chung surveyed a bamboo box filled with various cuts of fish. Parsons tried to guess which one he'd choose. "Kinmedai," Chung explained, placing a row of paper-thin slices before us. "Pink sea bream from Japan with white ponzu, wolf berries and shiso."



Parsons' own education in seafood started on the Cape, where he spent summers fishing. Ironically, it wasn't until a stint at the Flagstaff House in landlocked Colorado that he acquired his finesse for cooking. Back on the East Coast, he worked alongside Joanne Chang at Flour before setting off on his own to open Catch.

As for Chung's cuisine, our meal continued with tairagai, a pen shell clam served on its clownishly large shell with a gently torched portion of sea urchin. Next, a pan-seared abalone came with Chung's self-proclaimed "favorite curry" (called Aka, of course).

"He's putting on a clinic," Parsons commented.

We prematurely pronounced the black cod and sea urchin in a pea-tendril puree our favorite. But, with a one-two punch of acidity and richness, the spicy tuna and foie gras dish—laced with cumin and cilantro, and dotted with miniscule globes of pear puree—rendered us momentarily speechless. Glancing at Chung's restrained grin, Parsons nodded, conspiratorially. "He knows it's awesome."

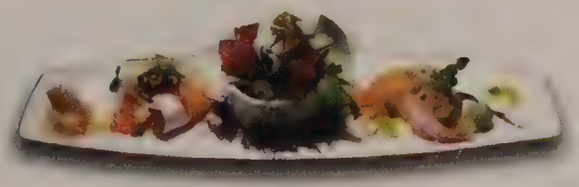
As we wrapped up our sashimi journey, we were joined by two of Parsons' friends, Lincoln residents who happened to stop by for dinner. We moved to another section of the bar, ordered a glass of Pascal Jolivet sancerre ($11) and suddenly entered bistro territory.



It's not a transition I'd recommend on a single visit, but we saw the benefit of having two restaurants under one roof. Chef Christophe Santos, formerly of Le Voile, sticks closely to tradition, with options like escargot ($9–$15) and ratatouille ($6), while showcasing a few ingredients sourced from nearby Lincoln farms. The results hit an entirely different audience.

Eager to try both sides of the menu, Parsons ordered the duck confit ($25), a mountainous affair with the tender drumstick on a mound of duck-fat roasted potatoes. My perfectly sautéed and hearty scallops ($26) sat over a delicate saffron-scented cauliflower puree. "It's hard to make a restaurant like this work, but they're doing something right," Parsons said, gesturing toward his friends. "Clearly the neighbors are happy." ×××

"Horsing Around at the Ritz" brought 300 people to the Ritz-Carlton Boston Common on May 8. The event raised more than $125,000 for the Bina Farm, providing equine-assisted therapies at the Dana Hall School in Wellesley for children and adults with special needs.

The fourth annual "Animal Tales Gala" took place at WGBH's studios on May 13. Some 300 guests and 20 dogs attended in support of animal care at the MSPCA-Angell. BREAKING BAD

Do-it-yourself sounds good in theory.

I HATE HIRING PEOPLE TO DO things. It's emasculating, because usually you're paying some guy to come over and perform a task that you ought to be able to do yourself, if only you weren't a useless, tender-handed liberal-arts major. For instance, I look at cracked tile grout on a bathroom floor and think, "I should be able to fix that." It's only when I'm on my hands and knees at 3 am, mopping grout off the bathroom mirror and the dog, that I realize I've overestimated my abilities.

I started the grout project at around 9 pm, thinking I'd be done by 10, and it could dry overnight. By 9:30, I'd gained a new appreciation for the miracle of linoleum. Excess grout kept creeping out of the neat floor grid and up onto the tiles, where I'd smear it around like a grout Picasso and then yell at it. There's probably a better procedure. My back and knees started getting sore around midnight, which prompted me to take a few beer breaks while resting my weary haunches on the only seat available. Take-home lesson: When you're sitting on the toilet, drinking Old Milwaukee and yelling at your bathroom floor at 3 am, you should've hired someone.

I had slightly better success tuning up my lawnmower, a hand-me-down that doesn't so much mow the lawn as give it a stern talking-to. When I'm done mowing my lawn, I actually hear the grass laughing. So I tried to fix the mower, a process that involved tasering myself with the spark plug and eventually removing grass clippings from the gas tank.

I convinced myself that my work actually accomplished something, since my mower now sounds like a Sopwith Camel getting shot down by the Red Baron (sadly, this is an improvement). But my true feelings toward it were revealed when I almost trash-picked an ancient, wood-handled, rotary-push mower that my neighbors put out on the curb. In the end, I decided it was better to have a crappy power mower than to look like an escaped landscaper from the "American Gothic" painting.

After the grout debacle and the standoff with the mower, critics might say that I shouldn't rent a wetsuit and attempt amateur underwater construction work in the Atlantic

I tried to fix the mower, a process that involved tasering myself.

Ocean. To those naysayers, I reply that I'm a better swimmer than you think, mom. I have a mooring in Quincy Bay. It's a 250-pound hunk of iron with a ball floating on the surface. The ball disappeared in March, for reasons known only to King Neptune. So I bought a mask and snorkel, rented a wetsuit and paddled around in an inflatable boat with my face in the water. I was the absolute picture of suave dignity. Eventually, I found the mooring. Which meant I had to dive down, down—seven feet down, to the very bottom—and clip a carabiner and rope on the chain, so I could haul it to the surface.

I can't overstate how terrifying it was to look into the inky blackness of the harbor, knowing I had to go down there. The rusty neck of the mooring loomed into view like a shipwreck, and I had thoughts of the movies Jaws, Jaws 2, Titanic and Pirates of the Caribbean: Dead Man's Chest. I took a deep breath and was kicking my way down when I disturbed a crab lounging on the chain. He was six feet across and had claws like bear traps. Maybe he was a little smaller. I don't know. But Deadliest Catch caused me to shoot out of the water like a breaching whale, landing in my rubber boat, where I spent the next few minutes calmly screaming "Get it off me!" while hyperventilating.

After allowing suitable time to convince myself that the renowned Ama divers of Japan regularly exceed the punishing depth of seven feet, I tried again. Fighting the buoyancy of the wetsuit, I kicked my way down to the bottom, found the end of the chain and clipped the carabiner to it. SeaQuest complete, I returned to the surface and filled my searing lungs with delicious oxygen. Then I leaped back in the boat before any disgusting aquatic animal could touch me, a circumstance that might've caused me to sprint across the surface of the water and keep going until I reached St. Louis.

But the deal was done. I executed an underwater mission at the ocean floor. Am I the bravest person you know? Maybe. But if you try something like this yourself, I suggest you buy your own wetsuit. You never know if someone wearing one of those rentals might've seen a really scary crab. ✖✖✖

ALL-STARS

Counting down my favorite New England athletes

I LOVE WINNING. I CAN ONLY imagine what life is like in Detroit or, heaven forbid, Cleveland. In a spirit of gratitude, I've compiled a list of my all-time favorite athletes to wear a Boston (or New England) uniform—five in this issue and my top five in my next column. (I'd be interested to hear your own picks.)

10. Ray Allen

One of the classiest people I've ever met, he can light up a locker room. More important, he's money. Watching Ray come off a screen and knock down game-winning jumpers will never get old, even as his age continues to climb. His stroke is one of the sweetest and cleanest—it reminds me of Fred Lynn's swing.

I couldn't count the times he saved the Celtics' collective ass with his three-pointer. What I've appreciated most, though, is his work ethic on defense. He plays the game hard all of the time, which wasn't always his reputation. Tommy Heinsohn loves Walter; I love Ray.

9. Cam Neely

Cam Neely represented this region better than any athlete I've ever seen. He played with passion. He cared about winning. He'd fight if his team needed it. And he could put the biscuit in the basket. When he was added to the Bruins administration, it added life. Neely helped bring passion to the team. I remember watching Bruins games, worried I might miss a Neely shift. The 2010 Bruins are close to being very good. But we need another Neely now.

8. Roger Clemens

I'm not going to get into the (coming) grand jury indictments or the steroids claims by his former personal trainer. Some of my greatest memories watching the Boston Red Sox, circa the World Series run, involve Roger Clemens throwing a fastball. After decades of trying to hit the ball over the Green Monster, Clemens taught us that pitching supersedes everything on the baseball diamond. I wish we'd won a World Series with Clemens leading the way. The Red Sox were a dysfunctional family during most of his era, and he was basically booted out of town by Dan Duquette, the GM at the time. What's happened recently is sad; this guy was truly a horse.

> We haven't given Faulk the proper love. If the Patriots win a title, his signature will be all over it.

7. Kevin Faulk

We haven't given him the proper love. He was here BBB (before Bill Belichick), and he's still around more than a decade later. After a mediocre start during the Pete Carroll era, Faulk became one of Belichick's go-to guys during the dynasty. He was the one the Patriots offensive coaches went to when a big play was needed. Some thought he was shaky off the field, but he was always a class act. If the Patriots win a title in the next two years, Faulk's signature will be all over it.

6. Jim Rice

Rice's problem early on in his career was that he followed Carl Yastrzemski, and then the Red Sox blew their attempts at the World Series. But in between, Rice was one of the greatest hitters of my generation. We came to appreciate him more when the steroids hit the fan, and we realized how good we had it with Jim Ed. What I loved about him was his ability to hit to all fields. He was a lot like Manny Ramirez (sans juice). In 1978, when I was a little leaguer, he hit .315 with 46 homers and 139 RBI, for 406 total bases. It took 19 years for Larry Walker to surpass that number. Not to mention, Rice rarely missed a game, and his defense, particularly off the wall, was very good.

Next month, my top five. ×××

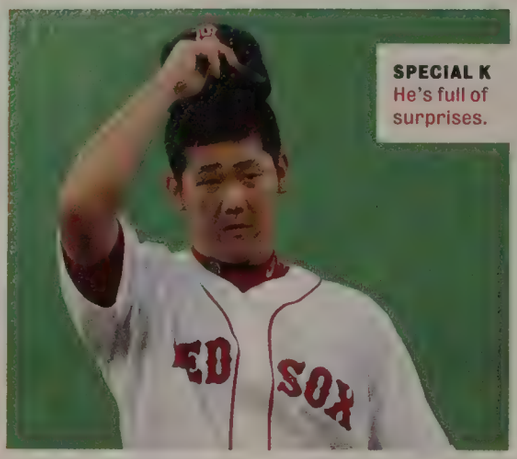
ON NAVA, NEELY, DICE-K AND DANNY

2 NBA FINALS RECAPS

THIS COLUMN WENT TO PRESS ON THE MORNING OF GAME 7 (THANKS A LOT, DONALD STERNS), SO JUST READ WHICHEVER ONE WORKS.



We Are the Champions... Well, now we've seen everything, and we know absolutely nothing. Conventional wisdom no longer exists in the NBA. The 2010 Celtics changed things forever. And let's hope this feeling lasts just as long, because who knows when the chance will come again.

They Are the Champions... Well, that sucked. Losing a title is one thing, but losing a title that bolsters the legacies of Kobe Bryant and Phil Jackson? I'd rather start a bar fight with a blacked-out Ron Artest. Sure, it was a valiant run for the C's, but there are no moral victories in the NBA—rings are all that matter. And who knows when the chance will come again.

1 ONE PRIME PROMOTION

It'll take a lot to offset the horror of the Bruins season-ending loss to the Flyers, but in promoting Cam Neely to team president, the B's at least took a step in the right direction. Here's to a tougher, grittier, more badass organization. All hail, President Sea Bass!

5 FOR THE RED SOX

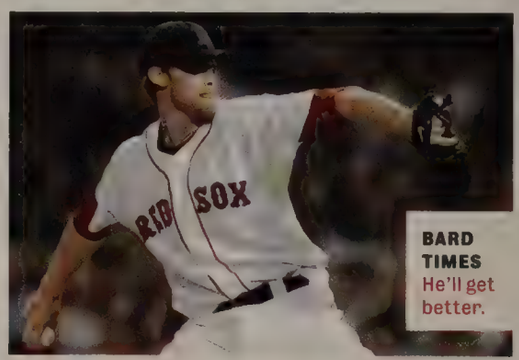
SPECIAL K
He's full of surprises.

Dice-K At this point, I don't know how anyone can be surprised when Dice-K makes a trip to the DL, but this time, I was. (Lesson, as always, I'm an idiot.) But I really thought he'd turned it around—2007 Dice-K was crowning during rebirth. But, no, just another glitch, which, I'm guessing, only means more struggles going forward. (Translation: He'll probably win the Cy Young.)

Give Him a Helmet There's some crossover with the seasons, but once the Pats are hit with their annual rash of injuries on defense, Belichick better give Adrian Beltre a call. Just treat him like Bobby Boucher—"Imagine they're a Red Sox outfielder, Adrian!"—and he'll be golden. You can do it!

Buchholz Gets the Point For all the comparisons Clay Buchholz has drawn during his breakout season, here's one you probably haven't heard: Rajon Rondo. Think about it: a young kid with a previous attitude problem leapfrogs three established All-Stars to lead his team to great heights. It's perfect. Only difference: Rondo won't get traded in July. (Yeah, I still haven't let that go.)

Nuptials for Nava? I can't be the only one who thinks that Daniel Nava might actually end up marrying Erin Andrews. There's just something so storybook about his obsessive courtship, and her reaction in the aftermath makes me think maybe she's down. Only time will tell, but I'm going on the record now—get ready for Erin Nava. (Man, that's an even hotter name! She's definitely doing it.)



Closing Out the Five We all got a glimpse of the future during Jonathan Papelbon's stay on the bereavement list, as Daniel Bard assumed control of the closer role. The result? Two and two-thirds innings, three runs, three walks, three Ks, a save and a blown save. Hmm. Well, let's just be happy that Paps is here for the rest of this year, but I'm not worried about Bard's rocky stint. By this time next season, he'll own the ninth.

Three Bits on Brady

Untouchable No More Whether it was his absence at OTAs, his kissy-kissy with Kobe, or the fact that it's been six years (I know, but still...) since the Pats have won, the veil of invincibility has been lifted off Tom Brady. Winning, of course, cures all. But if the Pats struggle, don't be surprised if he takes the brunt of the criticism.

More on Kobe Plain and simple: Tom and Kobe's postgame embrace at the Garden was a slap in the face to the fans. That doesn't mean they can't be friends—they certainly have a lot in common. But there's a time and a place, and on the court at the NBA Finals was neither. So, Tom, next time you want to get cozy with Kobe, just get a room (but, dear God, be careful).

And Then, the Elephant in the Room Will 2010 be Brady's last in New England? Smart money says no, but then again, it'll take A LOT of money to make him stay. And when you consider the impending lock-out, the lack of communication between the two parties and the big, Wilfork-sized mansion Brady's building in L.A., you have to wonder if he's got other plans.

BARD TIMES
He'll get better.

4 DATES TO WATCH

6/24: The Celtics pick 19th in the NBA Draft. Did you know it's been five years since a Top-20 rookie has suited up for the C's? Unfortunately, that rookie was Gerald Green. On the bright side, it's guaranteed that Danny can't do any worse.

6/25: The Bruins pick second in the NHL Draft, and by all accounts, it's either Taylor Hall or bust. I can't imagine they go bust, but I also can't rule out the possibility.

7/1: NBA Free Agency begins and not a moment too soon. It's about damn time LeBron started getting some attention.

7/3: The Tour de France gets going in, um... France, where, for the price of admission, Floyd Landis will call you a liar.

"Twilight is such a phenomenon, it's natural for people to have strong opinions."

Soroff On JULIA JONES

The Twilight star on playing a shape-shifter, the ending of ER and spoiling by Jimmy Choos

JAMAICA PLAIN NATIVE JULIA JONES, 29, began working in commercials and local theatre when she was eight. After graduating from Boston Latin, Jones earned a bachelor's in English literature at Columbia University and began modeling internationally, eventually appearing in ads for Esprit, Levi's and Polo Ralph Lauren. The American Indian actress (she's part Chickasaw, part Choctaw) has appeared on the big and small screens, in Quentin Tarantino's Hell Ride and as Dr. Kaya Montoya on the final season of ER, among other roles. Recently, she won the part of Leah Clearwater in The Twilight Saga: Eclipse. Jones also stars opposite Josh Brolin in Jonah Hex. She lives in Los Angeles.

Jonathan Soroff: Did you read all the Twilight books?
Julia Jones: Yes. I read them all within a week and a half [of] being cast. I had skimmed them, basically just looking for my character, during the audition process. I didn't have time to read them all. But afterward, I dug in.

Do you realize that half the tween girls in America want to be you, and half want to kill you for being cast as Leah Clearwater?
I'm a lot more aware of the killing part, to be honest with you. [Laughs.] I don't think I've ever felt so unliked before in my life. I just had lunch with another one of the actors, and she said she had the same experience when she was cast. But Twilight is such a phenomenon, it's natural for a lot of people to have strong opinions about it.

One of the names that was floated for the part was Q'orianka Kilcher [who played Pocahontas in The New World*]. Do you think she hates you?*
[Laughs.] I know her, and no, I don't think she hates me. I hope she doesn't. She's an actor. She knows how this business works.

Do you believe in werewolves?
Actually, we aren't werewolves. We're shape-shifters. The main difference is that the moon doesn't affect us in the same way. It's a completely different creature. If you really get into the etymology of shape-shifters and werewolves, they're completely different sources. But do I believe in shape-shifters? Umm, I don't know. I'm not closed off to it.

How about vampires?
Those I have a little harder time buying. I'm gonna go with no.

Ghosts?
Those I believe in.

Tell me a secret about Maura Tierney.
I can tell you this: Her father's locker was next to my father's locker at the gym in Boston.

What was it like to join such a popular show in its last season?
Well, there's a reason ER was on for such a long time. The writing was incredible. The acting was great. There was so much suspense. There were people who had been on that set for 14 years, and I could see how it could become repetitive. But because everyone knew it was coming to an end, every day felt like a gift.

How bad has the paparazzi scene gotten for you?
It hasn't actually, and in a weird, dread-filled way, I wish it had, because it's sporadic. If it was constant, I could get used to it. I haven't integrated that into my day-to-day existence.

Well, fasten your seat belt, 'cause as soon as the movie comes out…
I welcome that, because then it would just be a thing. It's a very confusing experience to, every once in a while, walk out a door and have a photographer there.

Is it getting lonely at the top?
No, I wouldn't go that far. It's more that I feel more protective of myself and try to calibrate what's reasonable and what's not. I think one of the dangers of fame is to get really paranoid, and there's no need for that.

If you were on Gossip Girl, what character would you play?
From what I've seen, I guess I'd probably be Jessica Szohr [the bohemian]. She's the exotic outsider.

Josh Brolin: hotter than a Fourth of July firework?
[Laughs.] Ah, yeah. A very good way of putting it. He's so hot, it's kind of hard to talk about.

What did you dislike about modeling?
The constant objectification—you find yourself, many times, with people talking about you as if you're not really there, aren't a human being, or don't understand what they're saying. I saw a lot and was exposed to a lot, but I was just sort of wallpaper.

What did you like about it?
The shoes. I have really unfortunate feet, and I learned as a model the difference of standing for 12 hours in a pair of Jimmy Choos versus whatever I would have been wearing. It was fairly massive, and it sort of ruined me. I love good shoes.

You have a bachelor's in English. Is it the most useless degree ever?
Actually, I find it so useful, I never could've imagined. As an actor, more often than not I'm just reading scripts and analyzing the character, and all of that was developed being an English major. I can draw from literature in what I do. It adds a dimension.

Do you still dance or take ballet classes?
I stopped when I was modeling because my bookers said I was too muscular. They wanted me a little softer, with more curves.

Weirdest fan experience so far?
When we were filming in Vancouver, somebody figured out how to get into the building across the street and found the right floor and started photographing us in our rooms. That was pretty bizarre.

How'll you choose your next role?
I just hope it's something I'm passionate about. Other than that, there's no point projecting. I would like it to be something that gets seen.

Would you ever do a nude scene?
Yes.

Describe your other new movie: Jonah Hex.
It's a spin on a western, but a combination of a few different genres. It's definitely a western, but there's a campiness to it.

Are you ready for the torrent of teenage testosterone you're about to unleash?
[Laughs.] No. I'm really not ready for that. ×××

RESIDENT ACCESS ONLY

A guide to the Cape and Islands from the people who live there

BY TOM SAMPH

Try the chowder.

It's the local specialty. Too often, that's the sort of insight Bostonians have into the Cape and Islands, destinations so familiar they court banalities like: Rent a bicycle in Nantucket. Provincetown has a vibrant gay community. Try not to feed the celebrities on Martha's Vineyard.

Well, yeah. To dig past the obvious, we asked four prominent locals to take us on a personal trawl through their neighborhoods. They offer tips both practical (the Vineyard has remarkable raspberry-picking) and enlightening (the old transvestite singing show tunes on the street corner in Provincetown is named Ellie). Obviously, they also recommend their own businesses, and so do we.

Their highest recommendation, however, is to take a short trip and see it all for yourself.

Let's get right to it. Best-kept secret? Millie's (508-228-5100, georgetownevents.com). Friends of ours have recently renovated what was the West Ender and are planning on bringing back a surf-like atmosphere, where fish tacos and local beer are king. The views are great, too.

Nantucket in a nutshell? Pristine beaches and whaling history.

Sleeping quarters? For B&Bs, the Brant Point Inn (508-228-5442, brantpointinn.com) is very accommodating, and for the price and location, you can't beat it. If you're looking for luxury amenities, it has to be Topper's (800-426-8718, wauwinet.com). Or the White Elephant (508-228-2500, whiteelephanthotel.com), which has it all and is right on the water in Brant Point. J Pepper Frazier Company real estate (508-228-3202, jpfco.com) is great for rental needs.

Shore thing? Ladies Beach behind the farm, or the Blue Lagoon in Quaise.

Caffeine fix? The Bean (508-228-6215) is the place for an espresso, and they also roast an unbelievable Guatemalan bean.

Brunch spots? Queequeg's (508-325-0992, queequegsnantucket.com) is a quaint little whaling bar that serves up local catch and does a fantastic job crafting cocktails using the local spirits. Its sister restaurant, Town (508-325-8696, townnantucket.com), is a mix of global fusion and has a great outdoor dining area.

Favorite restaurant? Galley Beach (508-228-9641, galleybeach.net). The quality of the food is only matched by their creative cocktails and the location on the beach.

Just have a day? Get a scooter from Affordable Rentals (877-235-3500, affrentals.com) and head out to Bartlett's Farm (508-228-9403, bartlettsfarm.com). Grab some lunch and bring it to Ladies Beach, just a short ride away, and spend the day in the sand and surf.

Polish the brass rail? Cambridge Street (508-228-7109, cambridgestreetnantucket.com) and the Brotherhood of Thieves (508-228-2551, brotherhoodofthieves.com), based on their menus and atmosphere. [They] make it a true beer-drinking experience. But I would stick with Cisco for the best spot for a cold one.

When a Cape Codder isn't doing it for you? Triple Eight Distillery (508-325-5929, ciscobrewers.com/distillery)... because they have so much to work with. Pi Pizzeria (508-228-1130, pipizzeria.com) has a very interesting lineup and is always pushing the boundaries of creative cocktails.

Hear some live music? For late-night entertainment, there's no better place than the Chicken Box (508-228-9717, thechickenbox.com). The Muse (508-228-6873, myspace.com/musenantucket), which was once known for bringing in some serious artists, is starting to dabble in some national acts. So, if you're lucky, you might catch a crazy night there.

Your ideal night? Galley Beach for dinner, Slip 14 (508-228-2033, slip14.com) for drinks, and then Bamboo Supper Club (508-228-0200) and the Chicken Box.

In the mood for romance? Sfoglia (508-325-4500, sfogliarestaurant.com) is always a nice spot. The food and service [are] pleasant, and what's more romantic than Italian? It's also close to the Bamboo Supper Club and the Chicken Box.

Aside from supping and sunning? The experiences with Althea K Sport Fishing (508-325-2167, altheaksportfishing.com) and Absolute Sport Fishing (508-325-4000, absolutesportfishing.com) are like no others.

Spending spree? The new Jack Wills (508-332-1601, jackwills.com) boutique. They make shopping a party experience, and their collegiate clothing line fits well with island life. Every time I visit, I walk out with something, and you have to love their English accents.

Guilty pleasure? The Gazebo (508-228-1266, nantucketavern.com) is one of the coolest [tourist] traps around. It's smack in the middle of the wharf—I really like the vibe at this spot.

When you need a box of crackers and imported cheese? Bartlett's Farm is Nantucket's version of Whole Foods.

Reads, beach or otherwise? Bookworks (508-228-4000, nantucketbookworks.com) is an island favorite for picking up a book or toys for the tots.

Nantucket as a beer? Nantucket has a rich, malty whaling history with a balance of hoppiness; its pristine beaches and its sunset finish leave you completely content but still craving more.

FRESH CATCH

MARTHA'S VINEYARD

REGINA STANLEY
CHEF/OWNER OF ARTCLIFF DINER
508-693-1224

Stanley, who has lived on the Vineyard for 11 years, graduated from the Culinary Institute of America in 1991. She spends her spare time gardening and antiquing. ArtCliff diner, located in Vineyard Haven, is beloved for breakfast and lunch items like fresh-from-the-farm green eggs and ham. Stanley also serves sandy crowds burgers and such from her food truck into the later hours.

First thing to do? Go for a nice drive and scope out the different towns. A lot of people don't realize that each town has its own flavor.

Best-kept secret? The best-kept secret is blueberry and raspberry picking (on private property)! The wild fruits are so beautiful here. You can go to Ice House Pond, and you'll find beautiful blueberries.

The Vineyard in a verse? The island is best-known for its casual atmosphere where anything goes. Nantucket is pristine, but this island has more flavor. There are farmers and locals, poor people and rich people. There's more diversity.

Sleeping quarters? I love Crocker House Inn (508-693-1151, crockerhouseinn.com) in Vineyard Haven. It's just off Main Street, and the proprietor does a great breakfast. There are eight rooms. Hob Knob (508-627-9510, hobknob.com) in Edgartown is great, too, or the Harbor View Hotel & Resort (508-627-7000, harbor-view.com) is a larger hotel.

Shore thing? Lambert's Cove. It's a little walk through the woods on a sand path, and it opens up to this beautiful, little, dreamy cove with no waves. It's in West Tisbury.

Caffeine fix? Mocha Mott's (508-696-1922) because they grind the shots there. They have amazing coffee, and it has a very local feel. The staff is really cool as well.

Start the day off right? State Road (508-693-8582, stateroadmv.com) because they have house-made donuts that are great. It's a really peaceful place to have breakfast. ArtCliff is a little more wild.

Favorite restaurants? Atria (508-627-5850, atriamv.com), Détente (508-627-8810, detentewinebar.com) and State Road. Atria has a beautiful dining room and local cuisine, and they just started doing this thing called burgers and brews in the basement. Détente has great wine and really inventive cuisine, too. The chef is trendy, and there's a great cheese selection. State Road is the newest restaurant, and it's in a beautiful building with a gorgeous garden—you feel like you're in Napa Valley. And ArtCliff, of course.

Polish the brass rail? Offshore Ale (508-693-2626, offshoreale.com). They brew their beer in the brewpub. It's a real local hangout with peanut shells on the floor and really good pizza.

When a Cape Codder isn't doing it for you? Atria. John is the sommelier, and he makes really good cocktails, too. Very inventive.

Hear some live music? Atria's basement because they usually have a local band there. The hottest place for everyone else was the Hot Tin Roof—everyone still talks about it; now it's called Nectar's (508-693-1137, nectarsmv.com).

In the mood for romance? State Road or Atria. They both have beautiful gardens outside, and Atria has a swing and Adirondack chairs.

Spending spree? Pik Nik (508-693-1366, piknikmv.com) in Oak Bluffs. They have funky, urban stuff, as well as jewelry and paintings. Midnight Farm (508-693-1997, midnightfarm.net) is great, too. They have home furnishings, soaps, perfumes and music. Nochi (508-693-9704, nochimv.com) has beautiful flowers.

Guilty pleasure? The Flying Horses Carousel (508-693-9481, mvpreservation.org) is America's oldest operating platform carousel. There are always lines with tourists, but it's worth the wait.

When you need a box of crackers and imported cheese? Fiddlehead Farm (508-696-6700, fiddleheadfarmstand.com) in West Tisbury. They have great meats and a nice cheese selection. The people who work there are very informative about the local produce they sell.

Reads, beach or otherwise? Bunch of Grapes (508-693-2291, bunchofgrapes.com) is a great locally owned bookstore. They're really creative, and they hire all locals to work there.

Your ideal day? A barbeque on the beach. I'd go to Menemsha, bring some wood and do some fingerling potatoes with rosemary and sea salt, and then grill bass that a local fisherman caught. And I'd have a nice salad with some local greens.

Easiest way to offend the locals? Yapping on [your] cell phone when you should be enjoying the moment.

CHATHAM

GENERAL MANAGER OF THE CHATHAM BARS INN
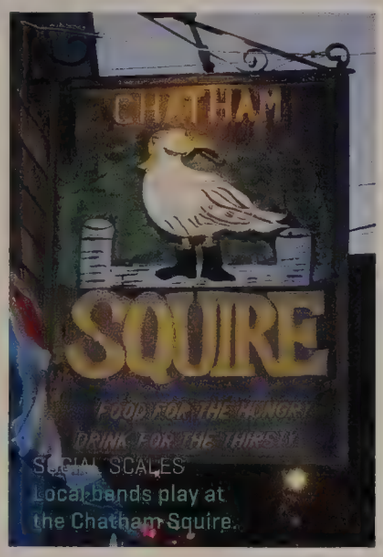
508-945-0096, CHATHAMBARSINN.COM

An avid fisherman, Zuest enjoys cooking his daily catch, walking on the beach, and exploring town with his wife and their dog. The Chatham Bars Inn, one of the Cape's best-known resorts, deserves some exploration on its own (particularly the spa, the grounds and the dinner menu). It also does a weekly clambake to make a Kennedy proud.

Best-kept secret? The amazing wildlife! Between Monomoy National Wildlife Refuge (508-945-0594, fws.gov/northeast/monomoy), Morris Island, seal watching, whale watching and fishing, there's something for everyone. When the tide goes out, there are huge sandbanks stacked up with seals.



Chatham in a quick hit? It's the most charming fishing village on the Cape with a variety of great food and shopping available year-round. It has the real quaintness of an unspoiled place. There's no visual pollution.

Sleeping quarters? If you can't stay [here], the Chatham Wayside Inn (508-945-5550, waysideinn.com) on Main Street is a great place right in the heart of Chatham. They're very well-managed and well-maintained, and there's a very nice restaurant. The Bradford Inn (508-945-1030, bradfordinn.com) is a smaller inn-type property, and the Pleasant Bay Village Resort Motel (508-945-1133, pleasantbayvillage.com) has a similar feel.

Shore thing? North Beach (chathamnorthbeach.com) is special because it's only accessible by boat or by four-wheel drive. It's in the nature preserve, and you can go to the Pleasant Bay area where it's calm. Once you get out there, it's like having your own private beach.

Caffeine fix? Chatham Village Café (508-945-2525, chathamvillagecafe.com) offers coffee and specialty drinks.

Start the day off right? [Try] Larry's Px (508-945-3964) for a quick and inexpensive breakfast. Hangar B Eatery (508-593-3655, hangarbcapecod.com) by the airport is good. There are about 15–20 seats in there, and it's an open kitchen so you can watch your food made as the planes come in.

Favorite restaurants? The Beach House Grill (508-945-0096, chathambarsinn.com)... dining at the water's edge, directly on the beach. Del Mar Bar & Bistro (508-945-9988, delmarbistro.com) is a very nice place in town with an eclectic mix of foods. Pisces (508-432-4600, piscesofchatham.com) is mostly fresh, local seafood; that's fabulous. There's also Vining's Bistro (508-945-5033, viningsbistro.net), which has an open wood grill.

Polish the brass rail? The Red Nun Bar & Grill (508-348-0469, rednun.com) has a number of beers on tap, including Cape Cod Beer. It's really local. There are bikers and fishermen and families.

When a Cape Codder isn't doing it for you? Del Mar Bar & Bistro has a beautiful bar, and the atmosphere is great.

Hear some live music? The Chatham Squire (508-945-1111, thesquire.com) showcases local bands on the weekends and karaoke every Tuesday. It's a real town pub kind of feel—everyone on the social scale.

Your ideal night? [Attending] a Friday night Chatham Band concert in Kate Gould Park (chathaminfo.com) and then a Chatham Anglers (chathamas.com) game.

Aside from supping and sunning? [Hit] Kate Gould Park for the Chatham Band concerts or Veteran's Field (chathamas.com) for a Cape Cod Baseball League (capecodbaseball.org) game. The Chatham Squire usually has some sort of entertainment after 10 pm. Saturdays bring Nature Walks along Monomoy (stateparks.com/monomoy.html) and Morris Island, a seal tour (508-237-0420, monomoyislandferry.com) or fishing.

Spending spree? Yankee Ingenuity (508-945-1288, yankee-ingenuity.com) has an array of items—from books to trinkets to Christmas ornaments and artwork.

When you need a box of crackers and imported cheese? Chatham Village Market (508-945-2993) is the best place in town to get groceries; they have a great selection of gourmet and specialty items.

Reads, beach or otherwise? Where the Sidewalk Ends (508-945-0499, booksonthecape.com) is a locally owned and operated bookstore with a wide variety, including books by local authors.

Easiest way to offend the locals? Stopping in the middle of/not knowing how to drive in a rotary.

PROVINCE-TOWN

DONALD EDWARDS
OWNER OF THE GOVERNOR BRADFORD RESTAURANT
508-487-2781

Edwards has lived in P-town for 68 years and has worked there for 40. His wife runs the Three Peaks Inn, a guesthouse on Bradford Street. Serving seafood staples including a mean lobster roll, Governor Bradford features a nightly, drag-queen–hosted karaoke show that always inspires dancing

First thing to do?
Have a cocktail and relax. That works anywhere—the Surf Club Restaurant & Bar (508-487-1367) or Pepe's Wharf (508-487-8717, pepeswharf.com). They have great views.

Best-kept secret?
Province Lands (508-487-1256, nps.gov/caco/index.htm) on the National Seashore. It's the unofficial place to relax with or without some clothes on.

P-town in a phrase? Diversity. Diversity. Diversity.

Sleeping quarters? Crowne Pointe (877-276-9631, crownepointe.com) because it comes with a restaurant, spa and bar. It's small, but it's a complete facility within itself.

Shore thing? Herring Cove Beach (508-487-3424, ptownchamber.com)—yes, yes, yes—this is the nude beach. Or Race Point Beach (508-487-9930, capecodbeachchair.com) is a nice beach, as well.

Caffeine fix? Coffee Pot (508-487-2580). This is the local place in the center of town at the end of the wharf. Or Purple Feather (508-487-9100, thepurplefeather.com)—they have good coffee, house-made sorbets and fancy desserts.

Start the day off right? The Post Office Café. Fanizzi's (508-487-1964, fanizzisrestaurant.com) does a good brunch, as well. Also, Café Heaven (508-487-9639).

Favorite restaurants? Ciro and Sal's Italian restaurant (508-487-6444, ciroandsals.com). The best and most original in Provincetown, it's been here forever. Crowne Pointe is fine dining with a star atmosphere. And Napi's (508-487-1145, napis-restaurant.com) has a very eclectic menu—everything from Italian to Greek to traditional American. It's worth having dinner there just to check out the art collection.

Polish the brass rail? The Surf Club Restaurant & Bar (508-487-1367). It's right on the end of the wharf. There's Old Colony Tap Inc. (508-487-2361), an old fisherman's bar, which is the oldest dive in Provincetown. Pepe's Wharf has one of the nicest views. You can spend the afternoon watching the boats go in and out from there. Bubala's by the Bay (508-487-0773, bubalas.com) is in the middle of the gay section of town, and it's a nice street scene; the whole world goes walking by.

When a Cape Codder isn't doing it for you? The Surf Club Restaurant & Bar is great for the wharf. Pepe's Wharf also has a good view, and they have all the froufrou drinks.

Hear some live music? The Squealing Pig (508-487-5804, squealingpigptown.com) has a lot of the newer Boston-based bands playing.

Top spot? Walking the breakwater (508-487-3424, ptownchamber.com). It's a bit of a hike, but you can walk about a mile out. It's a great way to spend the afternoon.

Your ideal night? Dinner at Crowne Pointe or at Napi's. Then a show: Maggie Cassella (maggiecassella.com) at the Post Office Café & Cabaret (508-487-3892) or Kate Clinton (kateclinton.com) at the Crown & Anchor (508-487-1430, onlyatthecrown.com). They're the premier women comedians in town. Then dancing at the Crown & Anchor or at Vixen (508-487-6424, thepilgrimhouse.com). The Crown & Anchor is mostly guys, and Vixen is mainly women. The Atlantic House (508-487-3821, ahouse.com) is good, too.

In the mood for romance? That depends on your gender or preference. I'd do a sail on the Schooner Hindu (508-487-7333, theschoonerhindu.com), an 80-foot-long old sailboat. It's a nice way to spend an evening with a bottle of Champagne.

Aside from supping and sunning?
There are a bunch of different whale watches (800-826-9300, whalewatch.com). Art's Dune Tours (508-487-1950, artsdunetours.com) does a sunset tour where you can have a lobster bake on the beach. You could climb the monument as well, or if you have children, go see the pirate cruise.

Guilty pleasure? T-shirt shops. There are a dozen of them, probably.

When you need a box of crackers and imported cheese?
Angel Foods (508-487-6666, angelfoods.com) has good gourmet items. Or Far Land Provisions (508-487-0045, farlandprovisions.com) is a typical grocery store.

Reads, beach or otherwise?
Provincetown Public Library (508-487-7094, ptownlib.com), which is located in the original Methodist church in town.

Notable resident? Ellie, a 78-year-old guy in a dress who stands on the corner with a boom box and sings old show tunes to people walking by. ✖✖✖

MARTHA'S VINEYARD IS UP AND DOWN.

AN ISLAND DIVIDED

BY JONATHAN SOROFF | ILLUSTRATIONS BY ZACHARIAH O'HORA

MOST NEW ENGLANDERS HAVE AT LEAST A VAGUE awareness of the rivalry that exists between Martha'sVineyard and Nantucket. I have a friend with a needlepoint pillow that says, "God made the Vineyard but lived on Nantucket," which is utterly ass-backwards. To settle that score once and for all: Local tribes (elbowed aside on both islands by the rich and famous) believed that the Vineyard was where the deity Moshup had his summer hunting grounds, whereas Nantucket was formed when he tipped out the ashes of his pipe. Enough said. So ACK is ACK and the Vineyard is the Vineyard, and never the twain shall meet. With that sorted out, there remains another, much finer distinction regarding Martha's Vineyard: The vast dichotomy between Up-Island and Down-Island.

Originally nautical terms referring to longitude, they now refer to the oceanic differences between the most populous end of the island—home to the major towns of Tisbury (aka Vineyard Haven), Oak Bluffs and Edgartown—and the more rural and isolated hamlets of West Tisbury, Chilmark and Aquinnah (formerly known as Gay Head and still stubbornly referred to as such by old-timers, but only out of earshot of the Wampanoag Indians, whose tribal land is located at its center and who precipitated the name change back in the '90s). What follows is a primer on the differences between the two, Up-Island being Never Never Land for privileged iconoclasts, nature-lovers and unreconstructed hippies (and indisputably Moshup's stomping ground), while Down-Island has become a summer playground for rich Wasps and the black elite. (Full disclosure: I spend my summers Up-Island, venturing Down only to catch the ferry).

To begin with, there's the matter of West Tisbury. To Down-Islanders, it's Up-Island, but to Up-Islanders, that's laughable. It's at least four stop signs and eight speed traps to get there. It's like Connecticut—whose motto should be "the state that's just in the way"—when you're going from Boston to New York. On busy summer weekends, one luxury SUV pulling out of Lambert's Cove Road can mean the difference between catching the ferry and getting stuck in the overpopulated and tourist-choked metropolises of Oak Bluffs or Vineyard Haven. In fact, the tricky question of West Tisbury's status has ruined many an otherwise civilized dinner party, with a resident of Chilmark snorting at the suggestion that anyplace citified enough to have a strip mall could possibly consider itself God's country, ie. Up-Island, and the offended West Tisbury resident countering with a remark along the lines of, "Well, it's not like we live in Edgartown."

Putting that sticky wicket aside, let's start with some basic generalizations about the denizens of each, to give the neophyte an idea of what we're dealing with:

Down-Islanders go out to dinner. Up-Islanders go to Larsen's Fish Market in Menemsha to buy fish… only if they haven't caught anything that day.

Down-Islanders have gin and tonics on the porch at the club. Up-Islanders wait impatiently for the liquor delivery truck to arrive.

Down-Island, foreplay consists of picking up the bar tab. Up-Island, foreplay consists of checking each other for ticks.

Down-Islanders go out to bars at 9 o'clock. Up-Islanders are asleep by 9 o'clock.

Down-Islanders put on makeup. Up-Islanders rely on the tap water, which looks like strong tea due to an excess of tannins. This gives them a distinctive orange, Oompa Loompa–like glow, and they're inordinately proud of it.

Down-Islanders act like they're in Nantucket. Up-Islanders wish the Down-Islanders were in Nantucket.

Down-Island, kicky sandals and a sundress or a blue blazer and tie from Vineyard Vines are de rigueur. Up-Island, a sweatshirt and pajama bottoms is considered formalwear.

In fact, the matter of clothing is one of the most distinguishing dividers between the two island sub-species. Up-Islanders pay a lot of money for access to private, clothing-optional beaches, while Down-Islanders spend a lot of money on designer swimwear. Hence, the fashion show that unfolds under the striped awnings of the Chappaquiddick Beach Club, versus the certainty of running into an octogenarian with his junk hanging out at Lucy Vincent Beach in Chilmark or the cliffs in Gay Head (oops, I mean Aquinnah).

Nowhere is the comparative formality of Down-Island more apparent than the Edgartown Yacht Club, where diners stand at attention as the color gun is fired each evening. In contrast, the sound of gunshots Up-Island is either someone getting caught stealing bait from an angry charter-boat captain, or a jalopy backfiring.

Both ends of the island have their resident celebrities. Up-Island are people like Larry David, Alan Dershowitz, Jake Gyllenhaal, and Ted Danson and Mary Steenburgen. Down-Island, there's Carly Simon, Meg Ryan, Skip Gates, Spike Lee, David Letterman, etc. Getting any of these people to attend a party at your house is considered a major coup. In public, however, they're assiduously ignored, with everyone acting utterly blasé, until they get home, at which point the first words out of their mouths are, "Guess who I just saw buying corn at Whippoorwill Farm/on the porch at the Chilmark Store?"

In general, Up-Islanders indulge in reverse snobbery, while Down-Islanders display forthright snobbery, an area that's best illustrated by the automobile. In Aquinnah, a rusted-out jeep with a surfboard on the roof has more island cred than a dune buggy. Down-Island, on the other hand, it's not uncommon to see a Rolls-Royce convertible, lovingly detailed and Turtle Waxed to a fare-thee-well. And while it's true that Up-Island sees more than its fair share of Mercedes and Land Rovers, these are at least tastefully mud-splattered and salt-stained.

It's the issue of transportation, in fact, that helps to create the divergent worlds of Up- and Down-Island. The simple fact is that driving to Edgartown from, say, Aquinnah, may only be a distance of 17 miles, but it takes 45 minutes and is an astronomical pain in the ass. Consequently, Up-Islanders are wily about politely declining invitations to socialize so far afield, especially when they know that the extremely aggressive police will pull them over for infractions as minor as not turning down their high beams fast enough. Until a few years ago, residents of Aquinnah had the advantage of knowing that if they passed one cop car parked at the police station and another on the road, they were home free, because the town only had two. Unfortunately, they've since invested in a few more.

Conversely, Down-Islanders have no problem coming Up-Island for dinner, jockeying for a table with a sunset view on the patio at the Homeport in Menemsha. This is a source of great amusement for Up-Islanders, who generally spark up the grill and head out to their decks for an even better view. The trade-off, of course, is the access to everyday conveniences. Down-Islanders complain that Cronig's Market is expensive and understocked, while Up-Islanders either have to schlep everything in, do without, borrow from the neighbors, or settle for the sometimes slim pickings at the Chilmark Store or Menemsha Market.

Similarly, there's the matter of rubbish removal. In Aquinnah, there are two days on which you can take your garbage and recyclables to the tiny town dump, where you'll have the pleasure of meeting a true island original: Natalie, the dump attendant. She won't hesitate to scold you for not breaking down your cardboard boxes. In Edgartown, the dump's open five days a week; the West Tisbury landfill offers Dumptique, a trailer where secondhand discards—which can range from dog-eared paperbacks to never-worn Ferragamo loafers—are free for the taking.

In several respects, both species of summer islanders are identical. By far their two favorite sports are endlessly talking about real estate and asking anyone to whom they've just been introduced, "So, how many summers have you been coming to the island?" That and rolling their eyes at anyone who makes the mistake of saying "Oaks Bluff" instead of "Oak Bluffs" are among their prime diversions. For lifelong Vineyarders, of course, all this is mere foolishness, and whether they live Down- or Up-Island—and despite the fact that many of them depend upon us for their livelihoods—year-round residents generally salivate at the prospect of Labor Day, when most of the summer people have gone.

In the words of one: "It's not that we don't like you. It's just that we can't wait for you to leave." ✖✖✖

CLOTHING-OPTIONAL

The best beach on the island is MOSHUP BEACH, the isolated and difficult-to-reach beach at the foot of the Gay Head Cliffs (accessed via Philbin Beach) that's clothing-optional. It's worth the effort and the ugly naked people.

LARSEN'S FISH MARKET in Menemsha is without a doubt the finest seafood store in America, and sells long-sleeved T-shirts that fade and age beautifully (I have about 20 of them).

FAITH'S SEAFOOD SHACK AND SUSHI BAR—owned and operated by Faith Vanderhoop and her husband, James—serves everything from Pearl hotdogs and mouthwatering lobster rolls to sushi as good as anyplace in Boston.

THE OUTERMOST INN and the CHILMARK TAVERN are the best restaurants Up-Island. The Tavern is run by Cambridge-based Chez Henri chef Paul O'Connell, while the Inn is run by James Taylor's sibling, Hugh.

The best charter-boat captain on the island is JENNIFER CLARKE, the wife of comedian Lenny. Operating out of Menemsha, she's also an amazingly talented singer/songwriter with several albums to her credit.

THE CHILMARK STORE is the best place to spot celebrities, relaxing in the rocking chairs on the front porch and eating mediocre pizza.

BEETLEBUNG FARM is a charming, honor-system farm stand, but go early as the best produce and flowers get snatched up.

ALLEN FARM, perhaps the prettiest farm in America, sells organic lamb that's worth the astronomical prices (as well as woolens and yarn).

Yoga classes take place at THE YARD (an artist colony in Chilmark) every morning in an airy studio.

MENEMSHA HILLS RESERVATION, run by the Trustees of the Reservations, is a beautiful spot to hike and boasts the island's highest point.

The best fishing on the island is the beach in front of THE DOGFISH BAR, but good luck finding a place to park and don't ask to use our driveway.

If you have access to a boat, take a quick trip to Cuttyhunk for breakfast at the CUTTYHUNK FISHING CLUB.

THE AQUINNAH SHOP at the Cliffs and the GALLEY in Menemsha are tied for making the tastiest chocolate milkshake.

THE MENEMSHA MARKET is the best place to buy gifts like tea towels. Owner Kevin Oliver is perhaps the nicest person you could meet. (On the same topic: Anyone who wears a Black Dog T-shirt or sweatshirt is automatically pegged as a tourist and will be treated accordingly.)

Once a year, I restock my gift closet at ALLEY'S GENERAL STORE in West Tisbury, which carries an excellent selection of children's, gag and hostess presents.

"MOPEDS ARE DANGEROUS" is a popular bumper sticker on the island and accurately reflects local hatred for them. Don't rent one.

And finally, if you're staying Down-Island, NEVER listen to THE WEATHER REPORT. There's a donut hole of sunshine that stays over Gay Head on even the grayest of days, and while it may be raining everywhere else, it's beach weather in Aquinnah.

This Place Is Topping

EASY AS...

ORANGE PEEL BAKERY owner Juli Vanderhoop doesn't have much of a commute. The wood-burning oven she uses to make bread, croissants and cinnamon "snail rolls" stands on the lawn at her Martha's Vineyard home. On Wednesdays, locals gather for a BYOT (Bring Your Own Topping) pizza night. Just look for the large peel (flat wooden palette) hanging at the end of the driveway.

Pizza Night takes place Wednesdays, 5–8 pm, $10 donation. Orange Peel Bakery, 22 State Road, Aquinnah (508-645-2025).

The A-Team ★ ½ Stupid even by the low standards one must apply to an adaptation of a TV show starring Mr. T, Smokin' Aces director Joe Carnahan's noisy, loutish shoot-'em-up aims to please but merely grates. Slumming Liam Neeson waves a phallic cigar around as the leader of a cocky, covert ops team spending so much time laughing at their own jokes and high-fiving, it's unclear how they get anything else done. You'll want to slap the toothpick out of Bradley Cooper's smarmy smirk. District 9's Sharlto Copley hams it up incessantly as crazy pilot Murdock, and some idiot in casting had the bright idea to let Ultimate Fighter Quinton "Rampage" Jackson quote Gandhi. The action is poorly staged and impossible to follow, and everybody's having such a grand old time that nothing ever feels like it's at stake. The end result is a smug frat party with explosions. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Babies ★ ½ We get it, they're cute. Enough already. Lacking narrative, dialogue or really anything a reasonable person might expect when plunking down $10 to see a movie, Thomas Balmes' pseudo-documentary is just a lot of shots of babies acting like… babies. They coo; they warble; sometimes they cry. End of plot synopsis. Spending about a year or so following four tots from Mongolia, Namibia, Tokyo and San Francisco, the movie simply shows kids doing what they do. I guess the locations are meant to hint at some universal truth, like perhaps cultural and geographic differences don't matter all that much when you're a barely-sentient newborn. This rainbow coalition of cute kids behaves identically. They're all adorable until they get hungry or have to go to the bathroom. They're also boring. Spending time with babies you know can be a moment-to-moment journey of discovery and joy. But not when they're strangers. This isn't a movie. It's a screensaver. (In the suburbs.)

Clash of the Titans ★ ½ The original 1981 Clash of the Titans might've been a silly, turgid film, but at least it had an endearing campiness. The remake is all business, as one scene even trashes the previous picture's robot owl sidekick as a symbolic gesture. Sam Worthington, who also starred in Terminator: Salvation and Avatar without displaying a single personality trait, plays Perseus, the demigod illegitimate son of Zeus who takes on the heavens in a holy war. Worthington faces some arbitrary tasks, whose random rules are explained by other characters just seconds before the battle begins. Things drone on like a video game, with Perseus defeating one generic monster after another, and then starting over from scratch in the very next scene. This new Clash is so flat and by the numbers, it actually made me long for that annoying robot owl. (In the suburbs.)

Date Night ★★ As the writing in TV comedies grows more sophisticated and edgy, its big-screen competition keeps sliding backward. Proof of this sad fact, director Shawn Levy's latest strands Steve Carell and Tina Fey, two of TV's smartest, funniest performers/writers, in a tedious slog that feels so much like one of those 1980s Touchstone Pictures remakes of French farces, it probably should've starred Steve Guttenberg and Shelley Long. Playing a boring New Jersey couple who steal a reservation at a trendy Manhattan eatery, Carell and Fey end up involved in a convoluted mistaken-identity scenario that leaves them on the run from crooked cops and Ray Liotta's spaghetti-slurping Mafioso. The two stars ad-lib as hard as they can, assisted by a sly, self-mocking supporting turn from Mark Wahlberg. But there's no escaping the fundamental lameness of Josh Klausner's screenplay, and Levy seems to think we've come to a Carell and Fey vehicle for the car chases. (In the suburbs.)

Exit Through the Gift Shop ★★★★ This remarkable, hilarious documentary from the secretive British street artist known only as Banksy begins as a slightly tedious story of an underground movement. Eccentric tagalong dilettante Thierry Guetta spent years chronicling the creation of spray-paint stencils that appeared on public walls from artists like Shepard Fairey and Banksy himself. But just when you think you've settled in for a routine hipster hagiography, Exit Through the Gift Shop implodes in spectacular fashion, as Banksy seizes control of the project from the incompetent director, and Guetta responds by setting the fickle art world on its ear with a million-dollar triumph of hype over substance. (This is the Adaptation of art

LONE WOLF

Horndog Michael Douglas is up to his old tricks.

Solitary Man ★★★
Starring Michael Douglas, Jenna Fischer, Jesse Eisenberg, Imogen Poots, Mary-Louise Parker, Susan Sarandon and Danny DeVito. Written by Brian Koppelman. Directed by Koppelman and David Levien. At Boston Common and Kendall Square.

LEADING WITH HIS SWAGGER and dimpled chin, Michael Douglas carries himself like Hollywood royalty, yet always carefully signals chasms of inadequacy lurking just beneath the posturing. It's hard to think of another leading man who so convincingly gravitates toward frailty, his characters constantly undone by lust, greed or threatened-white-guy privilege. Douglas is a much better, braver actor than he gets credit for.

Sadly, we haven't seen much of him over the past decade, save for bit parts in crap comedies like You, Me and Dupree or Ghosts of Girlfriends Past.

Mainstream movies have shifted away from the adult complexities and concerns that made even his trashiest thrillers worth watching. His brand of abrasive, flawed antiheroes are now found mostly on television. (I'm still surprised the guy doesn't have his own series on Showtime or FX).

But there are always indies, and Solitary Man has been almost too neatly designed as the Ultimate Michael Douglas Experience. Culling together elements of the star's most iconic roles, it's a somewhat contrived, if ultimately irresistible, one-man show of arrogance, entitlement and vulnerability. The film wouldn't work with anybody else.

Douglas stars as Ben Kalmen, a former auto-dealership mogul who seems to have dedicated the past six years of his life to self-destructing in the tawdriest way imaginable. Solitary Man skips the actual flameout in order to focus on the flickering embers. When we catch up with Kalmen, he's lazily taking the long way around his downward spiral, still living beyond his means and chasing younger women, only gradually realizing that he's run out of money and time.

His business destroyed by extralegal shenanigans, Kalmen's now scraping for a second lunge at the brass ring via the influence of his brittle, moneyed Manhattanite girlfriend (Mary-Louise Parker). But this being a Michael Douglas movie, he can't resist torpedoing his future by falling into the sack with the wrong woman at the wrong time. A visit to Boston University with Parker's man-eating teenage daughter goes ickily where you wish it wouldn't, and his already tenuous existence quickly falls apart.

Solitary Man has been neatly designed as the Ultimate Michael Douglas Experience.

Kalmen's finger-jabbing, car-salesman strut is an amusingly down-market take on Wall Street's Gordon Gekko. The boozy, college-town hijinks recall Douglas' last great role, as addled Professor Grady Tripp in Curtis Hanson's sublime Wonder Boys. Of course, the circumstances of Kalmen's horndog decline call to mind nearly every movie from Douglas' heyday in the late '80s through the mid-'90s, when he got into trouble because he couldn't keep it in his pants. Casting his frequent costar Danny DeVito as Kalmen's oldest friend almost makes Solitary Man feel like an episode of This Is Your Life, but the two have such a relaxed, enjoyable rapport together that it's tough to complain.

Douglas throws himself into the character, daring the lousy cinematography to show his age and reveling in deplorable behavior. After shamelessly bumming money from his adult daughter (Jenna Fischer) and regaling her with tales of his sordid sex life, he then seduces one of her friends and casually insults the sad, divorced soccer-mom until she flees his apartment. It's the most painful pillow talk since John Cassavetes' Husbands, and Douglas courageously carries it off without a concern about being liked by the audience. In fact, you'll probably hate him, but you'll feel for this mean old coot because his desperation is so palpable.

Some folks, especially as they're getting older and facing their mortality, just can't help but wreck everything around them. Take Kalmen's friendship with a young college student (played by Jesse Eisenberg in his default wimpy stammer mode). The kid looks to him as a mentor, so naturally it's only a matter of time before Kalmen gets hammered and makes a pass at the poor guy's girlfriend. It's all just a way of marking his territory, asserting his macho dominance as he feels it slipping away.

The film's almost-fatal flaw is to eventually supply a concrete explanation for the self-destructive streak. Solitary Man's last reel collapses into pat, Psychology 101 silliness, wrapping a fascinating midlife crisis up with a tidy bow. The final moments are easy and neat, the exact opposite of Douglas' jagged, fearless performance. ✖✖✖ documentaries.) Many are wondering if this is all a hoax, but if Exit Through the Gift Shop's droll, insistent provocations leave you asking questions about the thin line between artistic accomplishment and media manipulation, then it only rings more true. (At Kendall Square and West Newton Cinema.)

Get Him to the Greek ★★ Appearances to the contrary, Nicholas Stoller's follow-up to Forgetting Sarah Marshall is not technically a sequel. For starters, Jonah Hill plays a different character this time around, but the biggest departure is one of tone. You won't find the previous picture's gentle, inclusive spirit on display here. Get Him to the Greek is defiantly unpleasant, aggressive and gross. Sometimes it's amusing, but an icky aftertaste lingers. Hill stars as a schlubby, put-upon record company staffer who spends his days absorbing insults from his tyrannical boss (a monstrously funny Diddy) until assigned to babysit his debauched rock 'n' roll idol Aldous Snow (Russell Brand) on a road trip from London to L.A. What follows is a ramshackle collection of increasingly outré set-pieces involving booze, vomit, narcotics and ladies of questionable moral standards. Most scenes seem to feature some object or another being shoved into Hill's rectum, proving once again that anal penetration is comedy's new kick in the balls. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

How to Train Your Dragon ★★★ This is an unusually adorable CGI adventure from DreamWorks Animation, best known for the noxious Shrek series. Jay Baruchel voices a stumblebum Viking named Hiccup who aches to befriend dragons instead of slay them. Much to the chagrin of his Hagar the Horrible–looking dad (Gerard Butler, in his first tolerable movie), our young hero spends the bulk of the film cozying up to a moody creature nicknamed Toothless and teaching kids a valuable lesson about kindness conquering aggression. The story is a familiar one, with echoes of Avatar during the vertiginous 3-D flying sequences. But the movie is disarmingly sweet and strikingly well-crafted. Directors Dean DeBlois and Chris Sanders were responsible for Disney's charming 2002 oddity Lilo & Stitch. This one doesn't feel quite as fresh, but it gets the job done with rousing action sequences and a great orchestral score by John Powell. (In the suburbs.)

Iron Man 2 ★★ ½ This overstuffed and underdeveloped sequel to 2008's smash juggles at least four separate plot-lines, which wastes enormous amounts of our time piling on new characters and setting up so many potential sequels and spin-offs, the movie has no chance to tell a coherent story of its own. But personality goes a long way, and while still a colossal disappointment, Iron Man 2 at least offers the small pleasures of a ridiculously overqualified cast riffing off one another, whenever their clunky CGI suits aren't getting in the way. With the movie in his back pockets, a swaggering Robert Downey Jr. once again stars as drunken, narcissistic playboy Tony Stark. He's got some delightful screwball banter with Gwyneth Paltrow and a worthy nemesis in steely-eyed, monosyllabic Mickey Rourke. Sam Rockwell and Garry Shandling bring on superlative smarm, but this time around director Jon Favreau lets sequel-itis and thudding heavy metal drown out the zingers. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Cry Me a River

Speaking Out Louder, meaner and Botoxed beyond recognition, comedian Joan Rivers takes no prisoners in a new documentary, Joan Rivers: A Piece of Work. In the film, the entertainer celebrates her 75th birthday and reflects on the years she spent tormenting stars and causing scenes while rising to the top of her male-dominated profession. Her honesty and acid wit are on display on June 25 at the Coolidge Corner Theatre.

Domenica Cerasaro

Micmacs ★★ For anybody who thought Amélie wasn't cute enough, director Jean-Pierre Jeunet finally disappears up his own twee-hole with a limp farce about the weapons industry, of all things. The resolutely uncharming Dany Boon stars as a meek video-store clerk hit by a stray bullet during a gangland shootout. Lurching about with a cap in his cranium, the hapless fellow stumbles upon an underground crew of metallurgically gifted circus performers—each bearing exactly one exaggerated character trait. They, for no discernible reason, all agree to help him pit rival Parisian arms dealers against each other. What follows is one elaborate Rube Goldberg contraption after another, with the wacky gang pulling off bizarre, Mission: Impossible break-ins that send the angry missile manufacturers into ever-escalating rages. Not for one moment is there ever a sense of danger, and the outcome is never less than jauntily certain. Despite Jeunet's elaborate staging, all these rigorously designed set-pieces come off more annoying than thrilling. (At Kendall Square and Waltham Embassy.)

Mother and Child ★ ½ Writer/director Rodrigo García, son of Nobel Prize–winner Gabriel García Márquez, has carved a niche for himself helming soapy, slightly ridiculous melodramas featuring great actresses and gorgeous lighting. Pictures like Things You Can Tell Just by Looking at Her and Nine Lives boast strong performances in the service of absurd clichés. Mother and Child is more of the same, but with the volume cranked up to 11. Annette Bening plays a sobbing train wreck who spends every waking moment obsessing about the daughter she gave up for adoption 37 years ago. A shockingly good Naomi Watts stars on a parallel track as her abandoned offspring, now a careerist man-eater. Yet another plot line follows Kerry Washington seeking to adopt the child of Half Nelson's disconcertingly grown-up Shareeka Epps. There's a lot of New Age music while hardened, interesting characters learn how to give up their dreams and idiosyncrasies to become dull, doting mommies. The final flourish of absurd coincidences makes 2004's risible Crash seem subtle. (In the suburbs.)

A Nightmare on Elm Street ★ Here's another morally and intellectually bankrupt film from Michael Bay's Platinum Dunes horror-remake factory. Though described as a child killer in writer/director Wes Craven's original 1984 picture, we were always left to assume that Freddy Krueger was up to other things with the Elm Street kids. This version leaves out the ambiguity. It's telling of the filmmakers' diseased mindset that the only aspect of the story they choose to elaborate on is the history of Freddy's child molestation tactics. Upping the ante with sick flashbacks and shots of crying preschool girls with razor-fingernail scratches on their backs doesn't in any way enrich this particular saga. Giving Freddy a lair full of perverted Polaroids does nothing to make A Nightmare on Elm Street any scarier. It just makes the whole enterprise feel sick and tawdry, reminding you how wise Craven was to steer clear of that side of the story in the first place. (In the suburbs.)

Please Give ★★★ ½ Miles from the rancid, materialist chick-flicks that dominate the marketplace right now, writer/director Nicole

Holofcener's films tend to favor behavior over plot. They work their way toward tiny epiphanies that feel grounded and true-to-life. Nothing much happens, but everything changes. Please Give is Holofcener's strongest picture since her offhandedly-brilliant debut Walking and Talking and stars Catherine Keener in a role that shouldn't be remotely sympathetic. Except Keener is one of the great actresses of our time and is able to convey untold vulnerability even while saying exactly the wrong thing at the worst possible moment. As a liberal, guilt-ridden Manhattan antiques dealer making a fortune on dead people's furniture, Keener is a flurry of rationalizations, overcompensations and random crying spells. Her desperate attempts at volunteer work come to hilarious, sometimes poignantly disastrous ends, as she slowly learns the difference between "compassion" and "pity." It's a deeply unflattering role, yet Keener is never less than captivating. (At Coolidge Corner, Kendall Square and Waltham Embassy.)

Robin Hood ★★ Maybe the Kevin Costner version wasn't so bad after all? Ridley Scott's mega-budget prequel is a dreary slog through the aftermath of King Richard's crusade and has almost nothing to do with the tale upon which it's purportedly based. This is a glum saga where everyone acts sad, powerless and smelly between the pseudo-Braveheart skirmishes Scott tends to fall back on these days. And you can count on one hand the number of times Robin Hood fires his trademark bow and arrow. He's just another sad-sack with a sword caught up in historical intrigue, as if Scott decided to secretly make a sequel to his lousy Crusades epic Kingdom of Heaven and weasel it into production by calling it Robin Hood. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Sex and the City 2 ★ "Shoes, money, outfits, shoes, vagina, money, shoes, jewelry, outfits, money, shoes." That's pretty much all I got out of this two-and-a-half-hour barrage of fetishized luxury items, crass behavior and materialism sadly misconstrued as female empowerment. After the redundant, happily-ever-after endings of both the TV program and the first movie, there's no reason for this sequel to exist besides money. So I guess it's fitting that Sex and the City 2 is about how ridiculously freaking rich these people are. Instead of a story, we watch the gals vacationing at a $22,000-a-night Abu Dhabi resort. Little occurs besides costume changes, and the movie periodically stops dead in its tracks for lengthy itemizations of the products on display. It's a cartoon Middle East, where women wear the latest haute couture beneath their burkas and mean, old religious dudes get huffy over Carrie and her entourage tramping around their city with their aging, leathery cleavages hanging out. The worldview is toxic and the excess so wretched that this feels like a Transformers movie for greedy, middle-aged slatterns. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Shrek Forever After ★ ½ I can't believe I've sat through four Shrek movies. The things I do for you people! With its bare-bones animation—the empty backgrounds bearing the distinct stink of a direct-to-DVD sequel—this latest desultory slog attempts to reboot the series by positing an It's a Wonderful Life scenario. Mike Myers' charmless ogre gets fed up with all the burping, farting and pooping by his babies and longs for the more solitary existence of his old, undomesticated life. Dastardly Rumpelstiltskin (voiced by in-house animator Walt Dohrn, allowing you to hear cost-cutting measures in full effect) shows the titular ogre what life would be like were he never born, sending him off to wander around a blighted, dystopian Far Far Away. Shrek has to meet everybody all over again, an implicit acknowledgment that there's nowhere else to go with these characters except to start the entire series over from scratch. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Splice ★★ All the sins are of ambition in writer/director Vincenzo Natali's horror exposé. It's the kind of movie that flirts with so many interesting ideas that if you squint hard enough, things won't seem quite so terrible. Adrien Brody and Sarah Polley star as rock-star genealogists, creating new life forms out of scratch in a pharmaceutical lab while sneaking around at night to make a human-animal hybrid. The Frankenstein parallels are already obvious without the stars being named Clive and Elsa, and before you can shout, "It's alive!" we've got a moody teenage lizard-chick taking her shirt off in front of daddy. Borrowing from David Cronenberg, the early sequences have a nifty allegorical zing and moments of dry wit. Alas, Natali's grandiose plans get the best of him in the second hour, with goofy plot turns transforming Splice into the soapy, sci-fi version of Woody Allen and Mia Farrow's breakup. Bad laughs and bloodbaths ensue. Nice try, though. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

The Dead Weather transcends the sum of its parts with gothic blues-rock.

The Dead Weather plays House of Blues on July 14.

THE DEAD WEATHER carries no dead weight. Beyond being Jack White's most recent project, the band could even qualify as a supergroup. While the White Stripes frontman takes a back seat at the drums rather than play much guitar, Alison Mosshart of the Kills dominates the lead vocals. Guitarist/keyboardist Dean Fertita from Queens of the Stone Age and bassist Jack Lawrence, who also plays with White in the Raconteurs, flesh it out.

But the Dead Weather clearly wasn't assembled with résumés in mind—and, in turn, it has quickly eclipsed them. "It didn't feel manufactured in any way," Fertita says from his home in Detroit, the garage-rock stomping ground that he shared with White in the '90s. "It still had that similar feeling that I would've had 15 years ago when I was playing with friends here."

As such, the Dead Weather came together on a lark. After White caught bronchitis and slipped a disc in his neck toward the end of a 2008 Raconteurs tour with the Kills, he drafted Mosshart to take over his vocal parts. White soon invited Mosshart, Lawrence and Fertita (the Raconteurs' touring keyboardist, then hanging at White's Nashville home) into his studio to record a 7-inch.

Their chemistry measured up to much more: The Dead Weather has recorded two albums in less than a year and hits House of Blues on July 14. "There was enough there to spark the whole thing and get us interested in seeing what else we had," Fertita says of their initial sessions at the Nashville studio of White's Third Man Records. "I don't think any one of us had the thought we'd be here a year later with a second record and still touring."

The new Sea of Cowards suggests that this band is too much damn fun to stop. The album builds on the gothic-blues bones of the group's 2009 debut Horehound, blasting beyond the raw minimalism of the White Stripes with a darker, thicker attack. "It's a bit more explosive," Fertita says. "We had a year of touring together, getting to know each other as a band."

This band is too much damn fun to stop.

The focal point is Mosshart, who stalks the stage and takes the lion's share of the lead vocals, seething and caterwauling in tandem with White at the drum kit. "I'm Mad" is custom-made for the punk-reared Mosshart to inhabit, while the two singers collide in "Hustle and Cuss" and "Die by the Drop."

"I love that element of this band, what it brings, especially in a live setting," Fertita says. "It's so antagonistic, and having the male and female aspect of it as well is interesting to watch, even while we're playing."

In the studio, White plays the occasional guitar (including an incendiary solo in the new "Gasoline") or keyboard, but it's Fertita who carries that department. Besides his heavy guitar riffs, Fertita injects slabs of organ and synthesizer that tilt the Dead Weather in a prog-rock direction, suggesting a sleazy mix of early Pink Floyd, Deep Purple and Nine Inch Nails.

"One of the things that's so interesting to me is where we end up," says Fertita, former singer/guitarist for Detroit power-pop band the Waxwings. "Though I've been primarily a keyboard player in bands the last five years, it still feels really new to me. And writing from different perspectives is always a goal."

All four members cowrite in varying combinations, fueled by the spontaneity of sessions that burn fast and bright at Third Man. "We go with whoever has the idea at the moment," Fertita says. "It's almost like having conversations.... If there were these defined roles, I don't think it would be as exciting."

The musicians also plan to return to their other projects. Right after the Dead Weather tour, Fertita rejoins Queens of the Stone Age for a short European tour before that group sets out to make another record. But don't expect the Dead Weather to dissipate.

"We still have a lot we can do and say as a band," he says. "Hopefully we can coordinate everybody's schedules enough that we can squeeze out a few days and get another record done."

That's all the Dead Weather needs to conjure the perfect storm. ✖✖✖

YOU CAN GO BACK

A Stroll Down Memory Lane

Weird statistic: The deadliest cancer—which kills more people every year than the next three most-common cancers combined—receives the least amount of funding because of the stigma attached to it.

But it's not just smokers who increasingly get lung cancer, which was the point of Spread the Word, a swanky luncheon held at Pine Brook Country Club in Weston (where, incidentally, my stepfather and mother were longtime members).

On hand were cochairs Sondra Levinson and Meryl Bralower, and such patron ladies bountiful as Susan Poduska, Liz Novack, Cheryl Franklin, Judy and Leslee Shupe, Harriet Lewis and Amanda Korff, who presented an award in memory of her mother, Marjorie, to WCVB-TV Channel 5's Heather Unruh.

There wasn't a dry eye in the house, but lest it sound mawkish, the food was superb, the flowers were lovely, and emcee Susan Wornick lightened the mood with remarks like, "Oh, shit! You guys know all my jokes, but laugh anyway!"

In short, it was a memorable afternoon (in the room where both my sisters got married), but when I went to use the men's room, there was a sign taped to the door that said "Ladies," forcing me to use the locker room. They've redone it since I was a kid, and it's almost nice enough to make me want to start playing golf again. How about a Marjorie Korff Memorial Golf Tournament (hint, hint)?

Clean Up on Aisle Nine

It's amazing how some incredibly boring-sounding evenings in Cambridge end up attracting such interesting people.

That was the case when the Cambridge Health Alliance held its Art of Healing Award Dinner at the Charles Hotel. Looking natty in his bow tie was the first honoree, Dr. Ron Weintraub, and his red-headed pistol of a wife, Margo Howard (the syndicated columnist, daughter of Dear Abby and Budget Rent-a-Car heiress), reformed journalist Fiona Luis, eminent pediatric surgeon Lucien Leape, samurai poker player and esteemed law professor Charles Nesson, broadcasting babe Robin Young and celebrity chef Jody Adams, who arrived moments after a New Orleans–style brass band led everyone into dinner.

The evening's most amusing exchange: Development beauty Selena DellaRocco said, "I'm the director of major gifts," to which a man responded, "In my neck of the woods, that means jewelry."

For He's a Jolly Good Fellow

No one deserves a little pomp and circumstance more than war hero/real estate magnate/community activist/musician/nightclub owner Marvin Gilmore Jr., and he got it on Massachusetts Lafayette Day. French consul general Christophe Guilhou made Gilmore the first black man from Boston to win France's highest decoration, the Legion d'Honneur, in a State House ceremony, with the Comte de Lafayette and such Francophiles as Caron LeBrun and Armand Andreassian looking on. Then it was down the hill to the Union Club for lunch—a fitting venue, given that the walk there went past the statue in Boston Common of the all-black 54th Regiment, and the club was founded in the 1860s by a splinter faction of blue bloods who thought the members of the Somerset Club weren't strongly pro-Union enough. Before lunch, though, there were more medals to hand out—seems Gilmore never bothered to pick up the six he earned for distinguished service in World War II.

There also was a full honor guard from the 54th Regiment, with flags, rifles and the whole shebang Lest it sound suffocatingly formal: When Col. Sterling MacLeod took to the podium, he asked, "Where's Marvin?" to which someone in another room shouted, "Getting a beer!"

All Creatures Great and Small

Given the parking options, it can take a lot to lure people to a loft deep in the North End, but Chad Jackson and Kathryn Burton's hospitality made it worthwhile when they hosted a party for the Manomet Center for Conservation Sciences.

Besides learning about sandpiper migration (a bird, weighing as much as a AA battery, goes from the Arctic Wildlife Refuge to Guyana and back every year), guests saw spectacular photos of bears getting uncomfortably close to the researchers. They also got a chance to schmooze with the lovely Lacy Garcia and her improbably tall fiancé, Jack Roosevelt, international man of mystery Christian Bailey, interior designer to the stars DD Allen (if she's good enough for Oprah…), latter-day Billy D. Williams Darryl Settles, force of nature Beatrice Roy (Jackson's mother), laugh-riot Rosie Howells, two people who had last seen each other at a jazz festival in Panama City and one guest who said, "Just coming to the North End makes me gain 15 pounds." ✖✖✖

Massachusetts is Blue.

It's a 40-ton whale launching its body out of the Atlantic Ocean. It's the fresh catch-of-the-day at Quincy Market. It's the cloud-dotted sky framing the historic lighthouses of the Cape and Islands. It's the rollicking wave pools at Six Flags, the picturesque fishing port of Gloucester, and the bobbing rafts speeding down the rapids of the Deerfield River.

Shared Experiences

If life, at its sweetest, is a collection of sensory moments, I consider Boston a great supplier. Our city excels in creative expressions—whether through theater, or food, or art. High points this year for me included trailing the cast of Sleep No More through an abandoned schoolhouse, savoring a dish of hazelnut gelato, and watching my son paint his hair into an aquamarine Mohawk. It's satisfying, days and even months later, to compare notes on that immersive performance, to bemoan the disappearance of my favorite dessert, to laugh over a messy success.

Culture connects us through such shared experiences, and this issue collectively gives thanks. To the A.R.T., Coppa and Isis Parenting for moments like those described above, and to the other people and places that have captivated us. Taken together, Flock, the MFA, Rajon Rondo and the rest of the winners form a long list, and, in all truth, it's a bear to produce. Yet, it's also gratifying to have a hand in your enjoyment. That's what this magazine does "best"—helps you make the most of the city. So, as my son likes to say, "Here you go."

Post-Apocalypse Now

VAMP IT UP

NOT ALL VAMPIRE books are limp parables about high-school dating. Some of them, like Justin Cronin's best seller The Passage, are bleak epics about the annihilation of humankind, owing more to Cormac McCarthy than to Jane Austen. A Boston native and Harvard graduate, Cronin, 47, hatched the idea for his sci-fi, bro-vampthriller when his daughter told him his previous, literary novels (one of which won a PEN/Hemingway award) were boring. "You should write about a girl who saves the world," she told me," Cronin recalls. "I said, 'Fine, but you'll have to help.'" What began as a parenting exercise—a game called "Let's Write a Novel"—evolved into a multimillion-dollar book deal. Ridley Scott's name is attached to the movie rights. It is, in all senses, a fairy-tale ending.

Good Eats

Veggie Delight

It takes a certain level of curiosity (and willpower) to skip scallops and wood-grilled pizza in favor of the vegetable platter at Rendezvous Central Square. We did so on a recommendation and quickly realized that chef/owner Steve Johnson heaps love on the generous spread. Recently, the ever-changing cornucopia included curry–dusted cauliflower florets, Turkish cucumber salad with full-cream yogurt and juicy purslane plucked from his rooftop garden, a perfectly roasted red beet and the tangy red pepper–walnut dip called muhammara.

Drink of the Moment

REELECTED

The WARD EIGHT ($10) is Boston's best original cocktail, and you've probably never heard of it.

For decades it was difficult to find one that tasted any good. Invented at Locke-Ober circa 1898, the drink celebrated Martin Lomasney's election to the legislature. (A confident camp, Lomasney's supporters supposedly toasted "the Czar of Ward Eight" the day before the polls opened.) It was a winning blend of rye whiskey, simple syrup, fresh lemon juice, orange juice and house-made grenadine, but when commercial mixes and syrups became the norm, the Ward Eight turned into a cloying, sticky presentation.

Which makes it the perfect cocktail to be reintroduced by Hugh Reynolds, who was brought to Temple Bar to institute an artisanal approach to booze. Essentially a dressed-up whiskey sour, the Ward Eight is approachable for an audience accustomed to casual affairs. "When I first got here people were asking for Redheaded Sluts or Jäger-bombs," he says. "So I thought starting with Negronis or Tridents or Aviations might be a little off-putting."

Reynolds found that with fresh, in-house ingredients he could create a fuller spectrum in a previously one-note drink. "The grenadine and the juice provide a nice window to feature the flavors of the rye," he explains. "The citric acid hides the burn, and the grenadine [also] provides a low note for it all to rest on."

Boston is a leader in the classic cocktail movement. It only makes sense that we should resurrect one of the drinks that put us on the map.

Purveyors

Cold Comfort

Veronica Janssens and Susie Parish had the purest intentions. Dreaming of from-scratch ice cream without the gums and stabilizers found in most commercial pints, they started their own company, Batch. The usual glut of processed flavorings and extracts also got the boot. What's left? Fair Trade coffee beans and chocolate, whole spices (they toast the cinnamon sticks, and it shows) and milk from a cow near you.

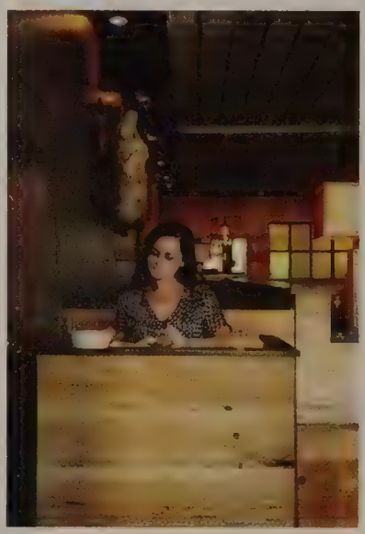
Going Out

WELL-EXECUTED

Down on Washington Street, where criminals were hanged by the city gates in the 1600s, the Gallows fits all the trappings of recent trends. The farm-to-table menu. The reclaimed-wood and Edison-bulb decor. The vintage cocktails at the bar. Then owner Rebecca Roth breaks out the Boone's Farm, and assumptions are laid to rest.

"We don't think it's interesting anymore," says Roth of dining's latest fashions. The Gallows' nonchalant spirit is more attuned to Roth's unapologetic love for iceberg lettuce and her affinity for 11 oz. "puppy" beers. Here's a woman who went to pick up a griddle, a cooler and a fryolator—and came back with a soft-serve machine. "'Cause how cool would it be to sit at the bar with a puppy beer and a cone of ice cream?"



Roth, partner/chef Seth Morrison and GM Seth Yaffe all met at Tremont Street's now-defunct Perdix. "It seemed natural to come back to the South End," she explains, "so we ended up making the bar we wanted to hang out in."

The food they want to eat includes a flat patty burger ($9) and a bananas Foster Fluffernutter brûlée ($6). Pâtés, terrines and charcuterie exhibit the house-made zeitgeist, while a selection of poutines toys with the prevailing attitudes. Fresh curds and gravy top traditional ($9), veggie ($11) and foie gras ($18) versions, while "out-of-control" ($14) specials have a stoner slant. Think Reuben-style, or a steak bomb poutine with Cheez Whiz.

"We wanted to create a place where people would feel comfortable, regardless of who they are," Roth adds. "Hospitality doesn't have to equal formality, and a lot people confuse that."

Admirably trying to dodge the labels affixed to new restaurants, she swats away "gastropub" and "modern tavern." "We consider ourselves a local," she says. Just don't refer to it as a great place to hang.

BAD BOYS

TO THE DAD AT FENWAY PARK WHO ALLOWED HIS SONS TO TAUNT A GROUP OF DODGERS FANS AT SATURDAY'S GAME: That group of 150-plus fans was here on a package tour for the three games. We were seated right behind them, and they told us how much they were enjoying the city. One even said that seeing how much fun Red Sox fans have at games made him want to be one. They were a polite and sober group. Late in the game, your young sons started repeatedly running down from their seats, screaming, "Dodgers suck!" at them, then running back to you. It got so bad that we were apologizing for them. Great job teaching your sons how to act at ball games. By the time they can buy beer, they should be really good at starting fights.

Disgusted at ballpark parenting

To "Tall, Dark and Handsome" at Crema in Harvard Square on June 10:

Wow, great look, great smile, great everything! I was meeting folks at an adjoining table, and your red T-shirt and everything in it was distracting. I don't even know if we play on the same team, but I'd love to see your grin and hear you laugh again!

To the Red Sox T-shirt guy at City Bar:

Please be advised that it's generally considered uncouth to begin eating a piece of discarded cake left by the person before you at the bar—while you're in the middle of asking two girls for their phone numbers at the same time. I'm not sure which was more egregious. Needless to say, we both declined, and you seemed surprisingly baffled. You might've had a shot if you'd eaten before you left your apartment (and put on a clean shirt).

MORE THAN A FEELING

A writer's emotional relationship with music

A STEVE ALMOND BODY SCAN would likely reveal millions of little dots, sparkling and pounding to the beat of rock. A self-described "drooling fanatic," Almond endlessly listens, critiques, deejays, worships—and then wistfully wonders about—his idols. Often nearing the dangerous flame of these stars and then getting disillusioned or rejected, he approaches music as a gigantic adolescence, a place for working out complex feelings. The luscious lyricism of some lyrics and the crazy, existential angst of others draw him in and twist him around. On Dayna Kurtz: "Her melodies were swollen with the complicated joy of sorrow."

Rock and Roll Will Save Your Life
by Steve Almond

Almond lives in the Boston area.

Throughout his wild adventures in the music world—sex, pot and, naturally, rock 'n' roll—Almond alternates deep longing and worship with frequent self-deprecation for being so very drooling. The art of hip-hop's Gil Scott-Heron ("The Revolution Will Not Be Televised"), whose "musical lexicon ranges from Marvin Gaye to John Coltrane, from James Brown to Tito Puente," entrances him. "It is the unique talent of the prophet to convert rage into poetry," yet in person he's "a muttering wreck, jittery, coked up, or tweaked out on some other cruel amphetamine." Almond elaborates both sides now. ✖✖✖

"What excruciating pleasure! To set the tip of one's index finger under the arched band extending from the end of the stylus, then transport that feathery aluminum arm (with its glamorous and barely visible tip) toward the spinning record! There was a right way to do this and a thousand wrong ways and the results were amplified."

TASTING NOTES

Local dishes chefs love

WITH "BEST" ON THE brain, we asked some chefs: What's the best dish you've eaten over the past year in Boston? What we learned: It can be hard to play favorites when you spend much of your free time in your friends' restaurants.

Clio's tomato martini

Brian Poe, executive chef at Poe's Kitchen at the Rattlesnake, was quick to answer: "I'm gonna have to go with Coppa, and the tasting menu at Clio. I'm a huge fan of the tomato martini at Clio."

But what was the standout? "The best of the best was the pig's ear terrine at Coppa," Poe says.

Mark Goldberg, executive chef of Woodward at Ames, couldn't narrow his choice to just one: "Bolognese from Teatro and truffled macaroni from Mistral—those two are definitely up there, although No. 9 Park's prune-stuffed gnocchi are always a hit."

Unlike most of his peers, Michael Scelfo, executive chef of the newly opened Russell House Tavern, claims, "I've been out to dinner maybe three times this last year." But Scelfo still has a strong opinion: "It's gotta be one of two things, both at Coppa: the pig's tail with mostarda or the pig's ear terrine."

Hell's Kitchen contender and Gargoyles executive chef Jason Santos took a couple of minutes to decide. "Let me think; I eat all the time! The tongue burritos at Anna's Taqueria in Davis Square and the salt-and-pepper–fried calamari at New Golden Gate in Chinatown."

Rialto's Jody Adams cited, "Two extremes: anything at O Ya, and the egg-and-eggplant sandwich from the Clover Truck. It was the textures—really good pita, really fresh and incredibly satisfying."

THE DONG SHOW

Did I see you on Chatroulette? Your junk looks familiar.

WHAT IF YOU COULD reach across national borders, languages and cultures to meet people from all over the world who share your passions and your dreams? Thanks to a new site, you can do just that. Chatroulette is a simple program that connects your webcam to another person's, allowing you to make friends and gain fascinating insight into their lives. And by "gain fascinating insight," I mean "see their schlongs."

A recent episode of South Park implied that Chatroulette is populated entirely by guys who are busy masturbating. Now that I've tried the site, I can say that South Park took some liberties for the sake of making a joke. Because Chatroulette is, at most, only 75 percent guys masturbating.

I start by firing up the site and, after giving it permission to access my webcam, my face pops up in a window. Directly above sits another window, where randomly selected strangers will appear. There's a button marked "next" to bypass people. Likewise, the person on the other end can next your ugly self. And that's about it. If you hit it off with someone, you can talk or type messages. It's like having a pen pal on your computer! So goes the theory.

I've never used my webcam, so I'm mildly horrified to see how creepy I look sitting at my computer. Maybe it's the angle of the camera or something, but I wouldn't blame anyone for nexting me. Something makes me seem strangely intense, like the cops are knocking at my door, and I'm thinking about where to hide my victims.

Nonetheless, I steel my courage and hit next, summoning my new friend. Here's a log of my first 30 seconds on Chatroulette: Dude with no shirt. Dude. Empty couch. Penis. Couple lying in bed, with the guy asleep. Porn ad. Guy and his penis. Empty couch again. Dude, dude, dude, dude, dude and his penis. Dude wearing a creepy mask, with some guy in the background packing a bong. Two girls, sitting on a couch. What?

"Look at him," one of them says. "He looks so shocked!" She sounds British. Well, of course I'm shocked—I'm looking at clothed British girls instead of naked dongs. Before I can tell them so, they next me. Like I said, I don't blame them.

Imagine walking into a party and half the people there are naked guys.

I'm pretty trigger-happy with the next button myself, to the extent that I don't manage to actually have a conversation. Imagine walking into a party where nobody knows anyone else: strange social dynamic, right? Now imagine walking into that party and half the people there are naked guys. Whether that makes the party better or worse depends on your perspective, I suppose. But, in my brief time on Chatroulette, I pretty much wear out the next button.

I venture back the following day, to see if maybe I'd caught Chatroulette at an exceptionally skeevy moment. Nope. It's more of the same. From which I must conclude that "Chatroulette" is a misnomer. First, nobody's chatting. And second, even in Russian roulette, there's only one bullet in the gun. In "chat" roulette, nearly every chamber is loaded. With wieners.

You could say that Chatroulette epitomizes the unpredictable nature of the Internet—the Russian teenager who started the site probably thought that people would actually use it to talk, not that it would quickly morph into the world's worst sausage party. But more than anything, I think Chatroulette underscores the differences between the sexes. Namely, women think they're raunchy, but guys truly are.

According to the Sex and the City representation of the modern gal, ladies can shame men when it comes to frank language and shocking sexual escapades—oh, you'd be horrified if you knew what the girls really talked about amongst themselves! But when anonymous webcam connections became a reality, who dropped their pants and began flashing the world? Guys did. Because guys are pervs.

While I don't know how many pervs are on Chatroulette, given the global reach of the Internet, it seems like a pretty small group. I kept encountering the same people repeatedly, and at one point I was even paired up with myself. Well hello there, handsome! Aside from the British chicks and the girl in bed with the sleeping guy, I saw a grand total of two other girls. They both nexted me. I guess they were looking for someone who's a little more Brad Pitt. Or a lot more naked. ✖✖✖

Soroff On BRIDGET MOYNAHAN

The actress, model and mom shares her own "Best" list.

LONGMEADOW NATIVE BRIDGET MOYNAHAN, 39, has established herself as one of Hollywood's loveliest leading ladies in films like Ramona and Beezus, which hits theaters on July 23. Other movie credits include I, Robot, The Recruit, The Sum of All Fears, Serendipity and Coyote Ugly. On TV, Moynahan, a former model, famously played Natasha, Carrie's rival (and Big's wife), on Sex and the City. More recently, she starred in JJ Abrams' drama Six Degrees and will appear in Blue Bloods on CBS this fall. Moynahan lives with her son, John, in Los Angeles.

Jonathan Soroff: If you got cast as another actor's sister, who would you want to play opposite?

Bridget Moynahan: I've always wanted to play sisters with Sandra Bullock. I think that would be so much fun. Can you work on that for me, Jonathan?

How about if you got cast as someone's wife?

I think maybe Russell Crowe or George Clooney. I could deal with that.

Daughter?

Well, I always wanted to work with Paul Newman, but that's not gonna work out…

Not without a séance.

[Laughs.] I guess I'll go with Meryl Streep or Diane Keaton. I would actually like to play Kathy Bates' daughter, as well.

How about mistress?

OK, I might go back to George Clooney. Or somebody dark and mysterious. Javier Bardem, maybe? Or Josh Brolin.

I'd go with Clive Owen, personally.

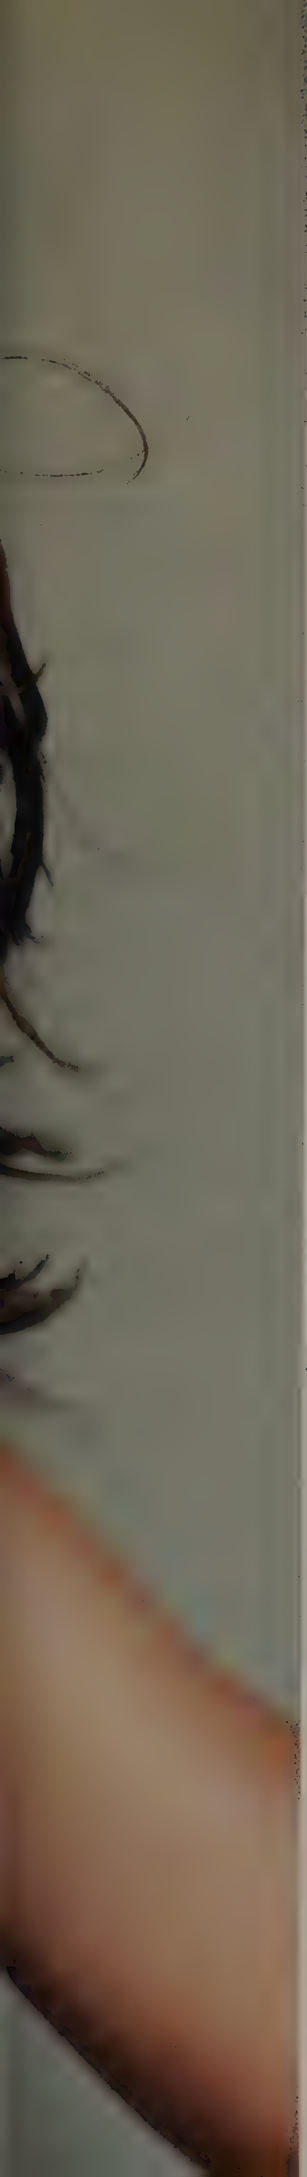
There are so many good ones to pick from, but that's a good choice.

So what do these things have in common: You, Bardot and Jones' Diary*?*

They're all Bridgets?

Very good. Is modeling a form of acting?

It's more like pantomime. [Laughs.]



Most uncomfortable or physically demanding modeling gig?

It's not like laying bricks or digging a ditch. It's not physically demanding, so for me to even imply that would be kind of ridiculous. You're wearing high heels and clothes.

Are you qualified to judge America's Next Top Model*?*

I'm going to go with no. →

I'm going to go with no. →

You made your TV debut on Sex and the City. Did more people love or hate you for playing Carrie's rival?
I think it was a love-hate relationship. They loved her character, but they had a lot more empathy for Carrie than they did for Natasha.

So do you think Sarah Jessica Parker hates you?
I haven't gotten any hate mail from her recently, but it's something to ponder. [Laughs.]

In school, you captained the basketball, soccer and lacrosse teams. Which sport do you still play?
I still play lacrosse, just throwing the ball around.

Most ridiculous thing you ever read about yourself?
That I was a lesbian using my boyfriend as—what's the expression?—a beard? I think that might take the cake.

One thing you'd love to read about yourself—Oscar for best actress, Nobel Peace Prize?
Those are quite the fantasies. I don't know that I could top them.

Favorite leading man?
Paul Newman. But one who I've worked with? Will Smith.

Some of your movies have been popular but panned by critics. Do you care what they say?
I didn't know they'd been panned by the critics, so clearly I don't care. [Laughs.] I don't read reviews. I don't read gossip. I don't read any of that.

Have you ever Googled yourself?
No.

Oh, c'mon! Well, I can tell you what comes up. It's not that exciting.
[Laughs.] Should I take it personally that I'm boring to Google?

I didn't mean it that way!
Oh, sure. "We Googled you Bridget, and you're not that interesting!" [Laughs.]

I'M ALWAYS AMAZED, EVEN IN MY HOMETOWN, HOW INTERNATIONAL AND URBANE [PEOPLE FROM MASSACHUSETTS] ARE.

I, Robot. That was based on a true story, right?
Absolutely. Very faithful to what actually happened.

What song do you always sing at karaoke?
I never sing at karaoke because, probably next to violent acts on me or my family, it's the scariest thing I could think of.

So we won't see you sing in a movie?
I did sing in a movie called Gray Matters. I had to sing with Heather Graham and Gloria Gaynor. And they asked me never to do it again.

One thing Longmeadow has over Los Angeles?
My roots.

Thing you miss most about Boston?
Besides my family? The change in seasons. I like winter. I like skiing. I love sweaters. L.A. is so funny. You can buy things that look like winter clothes here, but they're made out of gauze, and everyone wears Uggs here, even in the summer, paired with hotpants and a scarf. I mean, really.

Can you do a good Boston accent?
Not on cue. I did a pilot for TNT where I had to do a Boston accent, and I think it was OK.

Does Massachusetts have a disproportionate presence in Hollywood? It seems like all the best actors, writers and producers have a local connection.
I think it does. You know, I'm always amazed, even in my small hometown of Longmeadow, how international and urbane the people are, comparatively. I've run into a lot of actors out here who are from Longmeadow, not just Massachusetts. And musicians and directors. Massachusetts has so many schools that are exceptional, so of course you're going to have talented and intelligent people who go everywhere.

What one film would you most like to have appeared in?
God, there are so many. Maybe Mission: Impossible opposite Tom Cruise? I would've loved that.

Book you'd most like to see made into a movie?
Most recently, a book called The Help. It's this very interesting story about a woman who writes about the lives of maids in Jackson, Miss., during the civil rights era. It was a very bold thing, both for her as a writer and for the servants, to have done at that time, and the book is just beautifully written, wonderfully told. You get to know each character intimately.

Is there a part in it for you?
Probably not, unfortunately.

Are you a Facebooker or a Twitterer?
I'm not either.

They both fall into the category of total time suck.
I know. And I don't need anyone to know that much about me, nor do I need to know everyone's random, lame thoughts throughout the day. I was only introduced to Twitter by Selena Gomez when we were doing Ramona and Beezus. I had no idea it existed before that, and while I understand it can be useful, it's just not for me.

Is there anything prettier than the drive down Sunset Boulevard to the Pacific Palisades?
Yes. The drive from Maine to Massachusetts during the peak of fall.

Favorite New England delicacy?
I don't miss chowder or lobster. I used to eat a lot of fried clams, but I'm kinda off all the fried foods these days. But corn on the cob on a summer New England day is the best thing ever.

How often do you floss?
I hope my dentist doesn't read this. Maybe once a week?

Oh, that's not very good. Up, up and away, away with dental decay!
How often do you floss?

At least once a day.
Do you really? Why?

It bothers me if I don't.
Oh, alright. [Laughs.]

Favorite flavor of ice cream?
Fudge swirl. It's very difficult to find, though. I don't know why people aren't making it.

Last question: Give me one good reason why I should go see Ramona and Beezus.
Because it's based on a classic book that I'm sure you've read, and it's fun and wild and really cute and creative. ✖✖✖ THROW A DART AT A BOARD, and you're more likely to hit a paltry five or a bystander's head than to nail the bull's-eye. The same goes for picking a brunch place. We live in a world where mediocrity persists, and where one bad move can lead to serious indigestion. That's why we devote an entire issue to the city's top spots and services.

AS ALWAYS, we hosted a feast for a panel of talented judges and asked them to fill out a ballot of their personal favorites. This year's dinner party took place in the apt setting of the world-class Mandarin Oriental, Boston, where our local experts included Rounder Records cofounder Bill Nowlin, Skinner Auctioneers & Appraisers CEO Karen Keane and senatorial scion Ayla Brown [see page 132 for the full group].

BACK AT THE OFFICE, we counted their votes, weighing factors such as conflicts of interest, nepotism and crushing fact. Then, we picked the best in the field. From Irish pubs to French cuisine, from lingerie to sneakers, it's an exhaustive, but worthy, list of winners. All of which are worth a fling. JONATHAN SOROFF

DONUT

Betty Ann Food Shop

These donuts are the definition of homemade. When it's time to light the coal oven for that morning's batch (around 4:30 am), Betty Ann Food Shop owner Bill Scantlebury pads downstairs from his top-floor apartment and gets the fire going. Per his grandfather's recipe, he oven-proofs the nutmeg-scented dough before frying it in a vat of bubbling oil, hand-filling it with raspberry jelly (or lemon filling) and dredging it in sugar.

BAGEL

Rosenfeld Bagel Company

Rosenfeld Bagel Company is quickly becoming Newton Centre's worst-kept secret (no thanks to this issue), so it's best to approach your visit strategically. Decide on a bagel order—everything, potato, a couple of bialys and a cinnamon-sugar if it's Sunday—before your turn in line or risk impatient glares. As for schmear tactics, grab a tub of veggie, and don't dare leave without a loaf of the best challah in town.

BAKERY

Flour Bakery + Cafe

Somebody order a cake, because Joanne Chang's got a lot of celebrating to do. Ten years ago this September, South Enders took their first bite of her banana bread and raspberry bars at Flour. This fall, those of us dying to make her sticky buns will rush out and buy her cookbook. And last month, Cantabrigians scored the bakery's third outpost—affectionately referred to as "F3."

BANH MI

Mei Sum Inc.

Cheap eats like burgers and tacos are enjoying a heyday, but none rivals the satisfaction—or value—of this Vietnamese sandwich at Mei Sum Inc. For less than a latte, you get your choice of head-cheese, barbecued beef or fried tofu wedges on a toasted baguette. Toppings include cilantro stems, pickled veggies, fiery Thai chilies, fish sauce and mayo. You can't find a tastier meal for $2.75.

→ 36 Beach St., Boston » 617-357-4050

BAR FOOD

Craigie on Main

It may sound ho-hum compared with tantalizing options like duck rillettes and fried pigs' tails, but the potato galette (aka "potato crack") isn't just fodder for picky eaters. To get the crust extra-crispy, chef/owner Tony Maws deep-fries julienned russets before applying a classic—but haute—quartet of garnishes: bacon bits, horseradish cream, chives and salmon caviar. It's just one example of the attention applied to this bar menu.

BARBECUE

M&M Ribs

A good plate of pig's feet is worth a detour: It takes a little sleuthing and a reliable navigation system to find Big Moe's truck, parked in an empty Dorchester lot with a chain-link fence. But if you keep your windows open, the wafting smell will lead you to a helping of juicy chicken (try the jerk version when available), smoky pork ribs, soul-food sides and (on weekends) peach cobbler.

BISTRO

Hamersley's Bistro

You'll find chef/owner Gordon Hamersley in a Red Sox cap manning the line practically every night at his eponymous restaurant. His hands-on dedication means consistently high-quality fare at this South End staple. Top sellers include the roast chicken and the halibut with mussels, green onions, tomatoes, red peppers and garlicky bourride. It's no wonder the bistro's legion of devotees continues to grow.

AMERICAN

Post 390

With 340 seats spread among two floors featuring oversized windows and exhibition kitchens, Post 390 is bold and brassy. The American menu matches the surroundings, hitting high notes with prime rib and lamb chops. Plus there's chef Eric Brennan's half-pound, Kobe-beef hot dogs and a few hard-to-find domestic brews. Pies à la mode come in traditional flavors like apple or banana cream—about as classic as you can get.

BREAD

Iggy's

Ever had a torta at La Verdad or the roast-pork special at Cutty's (see page 52)? You can thank Iggy's for custom-making the sesame-seed bun holding those two sandwiches together. But it's the rare combo of high-quality, high-volume turnout that makes this the people's bread. Indeed, the bakery's goods—from thick-crusted Francese and ficelle to soft brioche—appear in restaurants (and home kitchens) all over town.

DINER

Deluxe Town Diner

Believe the rumors: Newton Centre commuters will soon have their own Deluxe—meaning they can grab a stack of sour-cream pancakes or a griddled egg sandwich on their way to work. Come fall, the Watertown original will get a sibling in the historic MBTA building (formerly a Starbucks). Plans for the site include eco- and family-friendly amenities like bicycle and stroller racks, and—we can only hope—the Rhode Island Johnnycakes, challah French toast and tasty breakfast meats.

BREAKFAST

Sofra

Start your morning salty or sweet. Try egg sandwiches layered with bacon, haloumi and aleppo pepper on brioche, or the popular morning buns with an orange-blossom glaze. Our personal favorite is the shakshuka—poached eggs in tomato curry with zoug, a spicy sauce. Grab a date-and-walnut twist for an early dessert.

BURGER

Radius

To cost a whopping $19, this uptown burger-and-fries duo has to nail every element: from bread (house-made "milk bun") and beef (coarsely ground chuck) to spud (russet) and seasonings (salt, pepper, chives). But the real trick to chef/owner Michael Schlow's perfectly calibrated combo is a two-stage cooking technique: Blanch then crisp the fries, and sear then slow-roast the burger, just like you would a great steak.

BURRITO

Anna's Taqueria

Boston's beloved burrito empire never disappoints. Choose among the fresh fillings, then add house-made salsa and guacamole. Omnivores might prefer carnitas, but grilled vegetables are just as satisfying. Turn either into a "super" with a boost of rice and cheese. At four to five dollars a pop, it's a dependably delicious cheap eat.

CHINESE
Bernard's

A far cry from your average chop-suey palace, Bernard Leung's eponymous eatery serves traditional dishes that aren't dumbed down for timid eaters. In season, the peapod stems are a must, while staples like steamed sea bass redefine the word scrumptious. Their dim sum brunch is superb, and even prosaic items like wonton soup are stellar. Don't let the suburban-mall atmosphere scare you off: This is dining as fine as it gets.

CLAM CHOWDER
B&G Oysters

Unlike flour-filled recipes that glop off the spoon like wet cement, the chowder at B&G Oysters drinks more like a shot of hot cocoa: creamy and smooth with a tongue-coating richness. Laced with bits of clam and tiny, cubed potatoes, the decadent starter is topped with the crunch of salty, bacon lardons. It may only be an eight-ounce serving, but every bite is packed with sweet, fish-infused flavor.

COCKTAIL Drink

This subterranean haunt, dedicated to the art of the cocktail, is worth crossing the channel to Fort Point. Drinks are individually crafted according to your liquor preference and a few key flavors. Say "St-Germain" and "lemon," and general manager John Gertsen might mix you the Maximillion Affair, while a hankering for rum could inspire bartender Misty Kalkofen to whip up a tiki concoction. Presentation wins major points: They keep the bottles out of sight, chisel the ice by hand and pour with flourish—and sometimes set orange oil aflame.

LOBSTER SANDWICH
Alive and Kicking Lobsters

Call it a New England summer staple. Call it shucked meat on buttered toast. But don't call it a lobster roll. Louis Mastrangelo believes his perfectly cooked, no-nonsense salad deserves a better base than a scrawny split-top bun, so he piles the low-mayo mixture between scali bread and dubs it a sandwich. The result—plus the kitschy crustacean decor around the picnic tables—makes it the quirkiest, and tastiest, version on offer.

COFFEE SHOP
South End Buttery

South Enders head here for their first, and most important, brew of the day. The Buttery meets their high standards with coffee from Equator Estate and loose-leaf tea from Mem Tea Imports, as well as one of the tastiest cappuccinos in town. Hot or cold, the drinks go best with the cafe's house-baked scones, muffins, pastries and cupcakes. Attention, early risers: Regulars, dogs and strollers in tow, start filling the outdoor tables as soon as the doors open at 6:30 am.

COMFORT FOOD
Tupelo

For a bunch of Northerners, Bostonians have their fair share of Southern-inspired restaurants. Maybe that's because, for us, they suggest comfort food, as in the biscuits and gravy and Cajun gumbo served at Tupelo in Inman Square. Chef Rembs Layman draws from his own Louisiana roots and family recipes to put out heaping plates of picnic-table favorites like barbecue chicken with potato salad, and pork chops over black-eyed peas. Save room for owner Renee "Petsi" McLeod's famed pies.

CUPCAKE
Sweet

A winner arose from the sticky aftermath of the city's cupcake smackdown, and it was Sweet. Having made a name with organic karat (laced with pineapple bits) and cappuccino (topped with the signature frosting and a fine layer of cinnamon), the bakery's three locations also play with the seasons, celebrating summer with pink lemonade (it comes with its own straw).

DELI
Barry's Village Deli

The logic of a Chinese restaurant gets applied to this deli's menu. Why choose between the latke, knish and kugel, when you can have them all (plus a healthy dose of chopped liver) on the "Jewish pu-pu platter"? That same have-it-all reasoning is no doubt responsible for the combo-series sandwiches and colossal clubs. Our favorite stacks house-made corned beef, pastrami, Swiss cheese, cole slaw and tangy thousand island between slices of marble rye.

DIM SUM
China Pearl

There are at least half a dozen Cantonese dim-sum options in Chinatown, and most of their menus look virtually identical. The difference is in the dumplings: How succulent is the shrimp, how supple are the skins, how spicy is the sambal? Every detail is stellar at this Tyler Street standout—particularly the silken tofu with fragrant ginger syrup, the sizzling turnip squares and the har gao with grassy scallion punch.

FINE-DINING DEAL
Clio

Ken Oringer's culinary tour de force has long served as a special-occasion spot—and continues to do so. But a new market menu makes it easier to justify regular visits. Available Mondays through Thursdays, the $49 deal features three courses that change daily. A recent meal brought a Silverbrook Farm egg to start, followed by diver scallops or a lamb loin and belly pressé, and finished with Japanese yuzu curd (dessert never gets overlooked here). The accompaniments alone—white-asparagus velouté, hot-and-sour artichoke chutney, native-strawberry sorbet—are worth the price of admission.

POWER BREAKFAST/LUNCH
Bristol Lounge

Few spots in the city offer a home-court advantage like the Bristol. Steps away from the stunning Public Garden, the leather-couched lounge is filled from 7 am through cocktail hour with the well-heeled and high-powered. The food speaks to the crowd: refined, understated, impressive. For breakfast, that might mean a Maine lobster hash with poached eggs, while for lunch it's wild king salmon on field greens. Either option should help you seal the deal.

FRENCH
Market

Francophiles looking for crepes or steak tartare might want to bypass this Theater District restaurant. But we adore Jean-Georges Vongerichten's Asian-inflected nouvelle cuisine for its inventive application of classic techniques. Beginning with the fines herbes and comte fritters and carrying right through the foie-gras brûlée, slow-cooked salmon and crème-fraîche cheesecake, the menu, executed by Chris Damskey, captures the innovation that makes French food so iconic.

THIS IS AN AD FOR A BURRITO.

At Chipotle, we know the only way to make a truly great burrito is to fill it with the highest quality ingredients, all carefully prepared using classical cooking techniques. Responsibly raised pork that's braised for hours to make tender carnitas. Guacamole made by hand several times a day. And cilantro that's chopped to perfection and tossed with lime and rice. It may take more effort to make burritos this way, but it's also why they taste so delicious.

Coppa

If you manage to score a seat in under an hour, congratulations. Ever since Ken Oringer and Jamie Bissonnette threw open the doors of their no-reservations South End enoteca, followers of these two top chefs have stormed the place as if they were giving away free slabs of house-cured duck prosciutto. But the wait is worth the considerable reward: wood-roasted meatballs draped with lardo, knuckles of pasta with slow-cooked broccoli, and a white pizza with summer squash and spinach.

FRIED CHICKEN

Highland Kitchen

Following the trend, we seem to be a city in the throes of a fried-chicken epidemic. But while it's tempting to indulge in the crispy treat on a daily basis, we choose to reserve the calorie-binge for Mondays, when Highland Kitchen offers their top-notch version as a special. Coated with a buttermilk-and-flour crust, the faintly peppery white and dark meats are just addictive enough to have us clamoring for the beginning of the workweek.

Formaggio Kitchen

An institution 30 years in the making, Cambridge's Formaggio Kitchen isn't afraid to embrace technology (just ask their 2,000 Twitter followers). The team of earthy, gourmet-food purveyors can talk for hours about their wares and seem to genuinely enjoy sharing their knowledge. Swing by, and you'll likely sample half the cheeses on hand, plus a few hunks of bread dipped in Moroccan olive oil, or even a slug of biodynamic wine. Take the daily dinner to go.

HOT DOG

Trina's Starlite Lounge

Other Boston wieners boast longer links or a Kobe filling. But Trina's takes our pick for best hot dog, period. Their griddled, all-beef version is served simply on a soft bun, making it just right on its own, or as a vehicle for every imaginable accompaniment. Starlite serves a rotating "dog of the day," wrapping it in bacon, bathing it in spinach-artichoke dip or piling on the broccoli. Did we mention the one wrapped in bacon?

HOTEL RESTAURANT

Meritage

Hotel dining attracted attention this year with the arrival of a certain big-name chef. But we're proudly touting Daniel Bruce for his efforts to keep Meritage, inside the Boston Harbor Hotel, dedicated to all things New England. The wine-themed menu (dishes fall into categories like light whites and robust reds) changes seasonally. And bar bites, including fried Nantucket scallops, are perfectly sized for grazing travelers.

ICE CREAM

Christina's

At last count: 94 flavors, not including frozen yogurts or sorbets. In any other context, such variety might seem like overkill. INDIAN

Tamarind Bay

The tikka masala here is as good as any, but the full menu deserves attention. Both the original Harvard Square and the seafood-slanted Brookline location break away from the usual buffet suspects in favor of more authentic upgrades like chicken stock laced with chili oil (beware the coughing fits), lotus-root fritters coated in a fenugreek-fennel sauce and a shamefully butter-rich take on meatless lalla mussa dal (simmered black lentils).

Diners from all over make the trek to suburban Belmont for the de Magistris family's warm hospitality. The place is hopping even on school nights. LUNCH

Cutty's

Squint hard at the menu tacked on the wall, and you'll spot a message scrawled next to one of the items: "I came all the way from Worcester to have the roast beef again!" Like Charles Kelsey's other signature sandwiches—spuckies, bacon and greens with spicy mayo, and the Saturday-only pork—this stack of house-roasted chuck, cheddar, crispy shallots and Thousand Island on brioche is all that and a bag of (hand-cut, house-fried) chips.

KOREAN

Buk Kyung

Though tinted with Chinese influences, the menu at both Buk Kyungs draws traditionalists who sit before sizzling stone bowls of chili-laced bibimbap. The cold, house-made buckwheat noodles are thick and filling but still chopstick friendly, and the comforting classic jajangmyun comes layered with chopped pork, onions, zucchini and an earthy black-bean sauce. The atmosphere is lively without being rowdy—probably due to the fact that neither location serves alcohol.

Behind Oleana's marigold-yellow facade, the tiled dining room and garden patio have the same transporting effects as chef Ana Sortun's spice-laden Mediterranean cuisine. The menu is mostly mezzes, or small plates, with a few meat- and fish-focused entrees, making it easy to dabble among dishes like fried mussels with Turkish garlic sauce, spinach falafel and trout spanakopita. Few spots along the waterfront have both the view and elbow room you'll find at Joe's. With shops in nearly every neighborhood, Upper Crust has built an empire on super-thin, crusty pies. Start with a slice sauced with chunky tomatoes, then pick your toppings. PLACE TO GO WHEN PRICE IS NO OBJECT
Menton

Barbara Lynch has managed to outdo herself with her newest, upscale venture, where the menus start at $95 for four courses. The sleek, neutral dining room holds a deceptively subdued energy, due in part to the affable, yet utterly professional, staff. Executive chef Colin Lynch (no relation) continues the trend on the plate, starting with the ethereally light butter soup with a foamy honey emulsion; from there, meals weave their way through a selection of locally sourced, perfectly presented dishes, like tender lamb and kataifi-wrapped langoustines. The desserts earn our praise, too.

SUBURBAN
Parsons Table

There's no denying this used to be a dedicated seafood restaurant: Holdovers from the Catch days include salt-roasted clams and a rotating fish preparation with fingerlings, house-made bacon and a grainy mustard sauce. But while Chris Parsons plans to relocate his ocean-inspired menu to a TBD urban dwelling, Winchester locals still pack the space for lower-key fare like pan-roasted chicken with risotto and peas, a grass-fed burger on a Mamadou's bun and chocolate fondue.

The lighting is just the right shade of dark and tables are narrow, giving diners a reason to lean close. SALADS
Stephanie's on Newbury

We love the fact that Stephanie's and now Stephi's treat their salads like champions, decorating them with ribbons and garlands instead of relegating them to the also-rans. They elevate the leafy starter by packing an entire meal into the mix. The base, whether it's hearts of romaine or iceberg, only covers a portion of the platter, while proteins like grilled sirloin or roast chicken fill things out. The yellow-fin tuna with crispy wontons and wasabi vinaigrette is a winner.

SEAFOOD
Legal Sea Foods

With their "If it isn't fresh, it isn't Legal" motto, this local chain has won a loyal following all along the Eastern seaboard. STEAK TIPS
The Paramount

The Paramount works wonders on this popular regional dish with their peppery, tangy version. The secret lies in the barbecue-based sauce, although the restaurant understandably keeps the ingredients under wraps. We know this much: Marinated chunks of beef get grilled to a charred, just-salted perfection and topped with crispy onion rings. The meat also comes with a mound of buttery potatoes and, in summer, a side of green beans.

STEAKHOUSE

The mahogany-and-Persian rug motif at Grill 23 may ring familiar to steakhouse lovers, but after perusing the menu, you'll appreciate what sets the restaurant apart from the herd. Chef Jay Murray has a long-standing relationship with Brandt Beef, known for naturally raised, corn-fed animals. As a result, Murray's steaks, rib eyes and sirloins have unparalleled marbling and texture. Those who don't eat meat will appreciate the sustainable seafood and poultry. And everyone should order the truffled tater tots.

RISING STAR

Phillip Tang

Before he even set down the first plate of hand-rolled noodles in his Inman Square restaurant, local foodies began comparing Phillip Tang to Momofuku icon David Chang. We think he demonstrates just as much kitchen talent—with a lot less ego. The young chef, whose mentor list includes local stars Michael Leviton and Barry Maiden, has a knack for dough (mantou bread with crisp pork belly is swoon-worthy) and dumplings, as well as for pickled vegetables.

TAPAS

Toro

Confession: Despite counting down to Coppa's opening (see page 50), we secretly hoped the new restaurant might shorten the line at Toro, the older sibling around the corner. No such luck. Past 5 o'clock, locals still crowd in for griddled garlic shrimp, sea-salted Padrón peppers and "the corn." However, lunch is another story. Stop in any weekday between 12-2 pm, and there's a good chance you can sit right down to the killer burger, plus some of the nighttime tapas menu.

THAI

S&I Thai

This Brighton Ave. hole-in-the-wall bills itself as a great take-out joint. But the real draw of Irin and Saesukh Doangpratheep's stir-fries, soups and curries is that they pack far more crunch and heat than competing dishes at the other Bangkok spots in town. For example: fiery som tum (papaya salad with sticky rice), sweet-and-sour pork tom yum noodle soup, expertly charred pad-si-ew, crisp pork belly with Chinese broccoli and (seriously) superb fried rice.

VEGETARIAN

L'Espalier

The dwindling number of vegetarian restaurants may frustrate the city's non-meat eaters, but there are treasures to be found where you might not expect. At L'Espalier, even omnivores ogle the degustation of seasonal vegetables, which transforms whatever's fresh from the soil into haute cuisine (like braised greens and gnocchi tossed with sage). The daily changing menu is chef Frank McClelland's way of paying respect to the herbs and veggies he grows on his own farm, Apple Street, in Essex.

Slurping noises resound from the Vietnamese enclave of Fields Corner, but for our pho we duck into a kitschy spot just off the Dot. Ave. stretch. Clerys

The long lines after 10 pm speak for themselves, but with three big rooms on two levels, there's ample space for you and your friends (whether you've met them yet or not). Two blocks from Copley Square, Clerys has morphed from a typical Irish pub into a Mecca for clean-cut guys and fresh-faced gals looking to meet up. Get cozy by the fireplace in winter; chill by the huge, open windows on summery nights. Downstairs you can dance, sing karaoke and, of course, chat with the cutie wedged next to you.

30-SOMETHING SINGLES

Eastern Standard

It's a great place for a first date, not to mention a second and third. If conversation flags, the people-watching will carry you past the silence. If you're hungry, the menu is expansive, with raw-bar items perfect for seduction. If you're thirsty, the bar is one of Boston's top cocktail destinations. And if it's a spectacularly successful date, well, the Hotel Commonwealth is right there.

AFTER-WORK DRINKS

Good Life

Nothing about this architectural gem in Downtown Crossing is buttoned-down Boston. Formerly a Sinatra-esque lounge, Good Life is now a great dance spot, with local DJs spinning drum and bass for an audience of hoodies, tats and neckties. The fashion-conscious flock here for Martinis and Makeover night. Those just looking to decompress can grab a 'Gansett, or escape to the downstairs bar, which serves more than 100 kinds of vodka.

BEER BAR

Sunset Grill & Tap

Known for their impressive selection—112 beers on tap and 380 bottled microbrews and imports—Sunset is beer heaven. This college-neighborhood perennial draws drinkers from far afield on account of their yard glasses, sample flights, meads, ciders and suds, ranging from Angel's Share to Zywiec. Jammed on weekend nights with boisterous fans, they also serve beer-belly busters, like loaded nachos and jalapeño-filled burgers.

BEST-KEPT SECRET

Myung Dong 1st Ave.

With picture windows, small stools, steel tables and twinkling lights strung across the ceiling, Myung Dong has an authentic Korean dive-bar aesthetic. Named after Seoul's bustling shopping district, MDFA is also Boston's first soju bar. Soju, a rice distillation, is taken by the shot or in special cocktails, including one served in a watermelon or in a giant fishbowl with white-grape juice, blue curaçao and a Swedish-fish garnish. There's also a long Japanese-Korean menu with dishes like chicken teriyaki, pan-fried octopus and grilled-eel bibimbop.

DANCE CLUB

Gypsy Bar

On Friday and Saturday nights, a dressy crowd (no polo shirts or baggy pants) assembles at the door. (Don't worry, the line moves quickly.) Enjoy the elbow room at the big bar and lounge areas before packing the dance floor. There you'll rub shoulders with students, bachelorettes, party-bus passengers and anyone else looking to live it up. Watch out for the closing bell; catching a cab out front takes a whole new set of skills.

WELCOME RETURN

Anthem

More spacious than their first incarnation near North Station, the new Anthem features two levels of dining and two bar areas, plus a 60-seat patio. Cocktails—including the Anthem Southside and guava martini—are served until 2 am, while the late-night menu offers all the right choices: Cuban sliders, wood-grilled flatbread pizzas and burgers. "It's an awesome space," says GM Todd Bennett, describing the greenhouse windows and balcony overlooking Faneuil Hall. Many happy returns.

HOT SPOT
Woodward

There's no dress code at this unpretentious adult playground, but just about everybody looks sharp. And diverse. "You can have whatever experience you want here," says a manager clad in sneakers. "Suits, athletes, models, hipsters, rock 'n' rollers, all together." Check out Cabinets of Curiosity, a collection of oddities that stretches across both floors and up the staircase. Grab a seat at the reclaimed-wood bar and order one of the superb cocktails—a Second Marriage, perhaps? Or retreat to the patio with a glass of the signature Woodward Ale.

The W has everything you want in a hotel bar, from genuinely comfortable furniture to knowledgeable staff. Even cooler, they serve libations enhanced by ingredients from Market's pastry chef; try the popular ginger margarita with house-made ginger syrup. After 5 pm, a post-work crowd mixes younger and older professionals, while late-night revelers, who line up patiently for admittance, get younger as the music gets louder. IRISH BAR
Matt Murphy's Pub

Matt Murphy's was a gastropub before the term was coined. Most customers opt for the fish and chips (with house-made ketchup and tartar sauce), but the double-thick pork chop is a knockout, and the shepherd's pie, properly made with lamb instead of beef (shepherds don't herd cattle), is a savory pleasure. Don't miss signature cocktails like the Immigrant (Irish whiskey infused with mangoes) and the Murphy's vodka gimlet (mixing lime with house-made strawberry-infused vodka). Cozy, dark-wood surroundings, giant rabbit paintings and friendly bartenders round out the appeal.

Pops Restaurant

Recently reconfigured to highlight the bar, Pops also showcases inventive, stylish food. Response to the menu introduced last January has been enthusiastic. The most popular bar bite, according to GM John Gould, is chicken-sushi riceballs, "Asian-style arancini—crunchy outside, gooey on the inside." Next is the spinach salad with cashew, mango and olive. Todd Maul

When he overhauled the cocktail lists at Clio and Uni, Todd Maul did it with a splash. His new 80-plus compendium is exuberantly wide-ranging and playful, divided into categories both conventional, like aperitifs, and arbitrary, as in "other stuff." There are a handful of cocktails for two, a selection of tiki drinks and daiquiris, and 11 gin concoctions, including the classic Ramos Gin Fizz and the new 370 Comm. Enclosed by stone walls that double as planting beds—lavishly decorated by a local florist—the patio at Ledge is an urban sanctuary. "You don't have the atmosphere of being in the city here," says John Comeau, one of the managers. Instead, the setting lends itself to relaxation. There are about 75 seats—including six at the bar—comfortable furniture and two TVs. PRE-GARDEN

Right across from the TD Garden, Sully's is your straightforward sports dive. Although the long, narrow setup means things can get cramped, folks cherish the no-frills attitude. POST-GARDEN
The Four's

The Four's is unbeatably convenient when your adrenaline is flagging. You'll get a quick pick-me-up in the form of 42 TVs showing highlights. Vast quantities of memorabilia also provide visual stimulation, and if you're peckish, the Bobby Orr steak-tip sandwich—a house special—will put an end to your hunger. PRE-FENWAY
Jerry Remy's

Yes, of course, there's a RemDawg (smothered in chili, cheddar and pickled onion). But there's also barbecue from a custom-smoker trailer and a wine list that has no business in a sports bar. Fans can cough up as much as $500 for a season ticket, which lets you cut the line and guarantees a seat, or you can take your chances and hope for a place at the bar. Then again, with plenty of space and a cadre of TVs, including two 11' by 6' 6" projection units, there's not a bad view in the house.

It's not summer in Boston until Tia's opens their doors. Of course, the crowd's focus isn't always on the waterfront view, but rather on each other. This is an unparalleled pickup scene. Bukowski Tavern

Mailman-turned-bard-of-the-beats "Hank" Bukowski would've been 90 this August. Alas, after a good (if rowdy) run, he shuffled off in '94 at age 73. Boston University might house his collection of papers, but this dark and musty spot is the real destination for followers of the poet laureate of dive bars. Happy hour might seem an antiquated custom here in the land of the Blue Laws, but the Hill—just around the corner from the birthplace of those laws—makes it work. The People's Republik

This bar's name is less a jibe at Cambridge's earnest liberalism than an affectionate tribute to it. Tradesmen mix with the NPR crowd, darts fly, taps spew Magic Hat and Dogfish Head—all until 2 am, Thursdays through Saturdays and on holiday eves, a rarity in Cambridge. Check out the painting of the Last Supper with some Republik regulars sitting in for the apostolic crew. The same faces can be seen in the crowd on any given night.

CHARLESTOWN
Warren Tavern

Established in 1780, this is one of the country's most historic watering holes. George Washington drank here. Paul Revere was a regular. And by the mid-20th century, Warren was a dining destination for sophisticated Bostonians and tourists. Today they've returned to their roots as a casual hangout for locals—very local; don't even think about a parking space. The Warren doesn't traffic in legacy (hardly a Revolutionary memento in sight, but lots of photos of Boston from a century ago). It's just happy to serve a good burger to the gregarious, modern-day neighbors.

"You're not guaranteed to find a TV on," bartender Adam Wells says. What you are guaranteed is an easygoing pub where the best-selling brew is Guinness, the regulars engage in actual conversation, and it's not at all unusual for customers to bring their own food or their dog. "People like to stop in with their animal," Adam says. "Since we don't serve food, it's not a problem." Brown-baggers wash it down with a rotating selection of 30 drafts and 29 bottles. No credit cards and no TVs, except on special occasions, so bring your cash, a talking point and an appreciation for a true tavern.

With live music on Mondays and karaoke on Tuesdays, the bar stays open 'til 2 am, Thursdays through Saturdays. Named after the original owner in 1970, the hangout is now run by brothers Paul and Jaap Overgaag, who have an organic farm in western Mass. that provides meat and produce for both Charlies and their restaurant, the Red House.

Relaxed and casual, Devlin's is a Swiss army knife of a bar, unfolding into three separate areas (four if you count the new upstairs function room). On your left, there's a neighborhood tavern. SUNDAY

Recover at the Enormous Room

The room's actually not so enormous—maybe 15' by 50'—but the carpeted platforms and plush pillows suggest your personal Kasbah for recumbent recovery. LOCAL ARTIST

Andrew Witkin

Boston-based artist Andrew Witkin finds inspiration in the intersection of daily life, work and relationships, often incorporating household furniture and found objects into his installations. By, say, stamping 144 white T-shirts with different, pithy phrases, Witkin puzzles over themes like personal fulfillment versus social responsibility. The effect is cumulative, in that it gathers a lot of bits and pieces together, and collaborative, in that he sometimes invites musicians to perform in his spaces. Not to mention, he's a visiting lecturer at Harvard and won the ICA's 2008 James and Audrey Foster Prize. In his art, small subjects meet big vision.

EXHIBIT

Titian, Tintoretto, Veronese: Rivals in Renaissance Venice

It may seem odd that a showdown between three 16th-century Venetian painters energized a 21st-century American city, but the Museum of Fine Arts staged this marquee exhibit with such flair and intelligence that it made a 500-year-old rivalry feel fresh. With impressive loans from such big names as the Uffizi, the Louvre, and the national galleries in London and Edinburgh, the exhaustive collection demonstrated how an aesthetic competition pushed the evolution of art, and how the MFA continues to tell important stories through its world-class shows.

PRODUCTION

Sleep No More

Last October, Britain's Punchdrunk Theatre Company and our own A.R.T. created a haunting work of interactive art, melding Shakespeare and Hitchcock, that was both the hottest ticket in town and the most provocative. When a play reinvents the public's perception of theater, it deserves applause. When it sells out its entire run, generates a fan-fiction blog, lays the groundwork for Boston's only Scottish pub and leaves audiences brokenhearted at its departure, it deserves the title of cultural phenomenon.

ALBUM BY A LOCAL ARTIST

Live on Lansdowne, Dropkick Murphys

Boston's resident house band released their third live album this past St. Patrick's Day, featuring a compilation of Celtic punk anthems recorded at the House of Blues. The songs are familiar— "Tessie," "Fields of Athenry" and a version of "I'm Shipping Up to Boston" with the Mighty Mighty Bosstones— but that, and their Southie Irish kick, makes them ever-green. Proof, if you needed any, that they rule the stage.

MOVIE FILMED IN BOSTON

Shutter Island

Based on a 2003 novel by Dorchester native Dennis Lehane, this dark, period mystery marked the second time Martin Scorsese and Leonardo DiCaprio collaborated on a Boston flick (the first was 2006's hit, The Departed). Shooting took place all over eastern Massachusetts— Taunton, Hull, Nahant. Rusty industrial lots, bleak stone walls and a threatening sea color the film's atmosphere. In other words, it looks like home, filtered through a lens of gothic shadow and insanity. Not to mention, Ben Kingsley has never seemed creepier.

NONFICTION BOOK BY A LOCAL BIGWIG

by Ted Kennedy

Ted Kennedy's 2009 autobiography appeared in bookstores a short time after he died, which adds an extra dose of poignancy to an already poignant story. Drawing from the journals he kept for nearly 50 years, and touching on all of his triumphs and failures (including five pages devoted to the 1969 Chappaquiddick incident), it's a compelling read. Kennedy's especially candid when discussing his family. As he says: "My story is their story, and theirs is mine. And so it shall be in these pages."

TINKERS, EMPIRES OF FOOD AND TRUE COMPASS

NONFICTION BOOK BY AN IMPROPER BOSTONIAN STAFFER

by Evan D.G. Fraser and Andrew Rimas

Andrew Rimas (this publication's managing editor) and Evan D.G. Fraser follow up their 2008 book Beef with an exploration of the food trade's past and questionable future. Framed by an account of a 16th-century merchant's globe-trotting adventures, the book explains how agriculture influences civilization, helping it flourish in the fertile years, then cutting it off at the knees with an environmental backlash. The writers' prose brims with wit and erudition, making anything by Malcolm Gladwell seem like something scratched on a schoolhouse toilet stall. [Editor's note: Don't overdo it, Andrew.]

Tinkers

by Paul Harding

Telling the story of a retired clockmaker looking back on his life in his final hours, Tinkers won this year's Pulitzer Prize for fiction, rocketing Harding (a UMass Amherst grad and Harvard University writing instructor) to the top of the literary list. His next book is slated for release in 2012.

COMEBACK

Tom Brady

Tom Brady's done. He'll never be the same. You don't come back from a knee injury like that. So said the football swamis after Brady seemed to be lacking his typical confidence early in the 2009 season. And then... Week 6, the Pats are up against the Tennessee Titans. Brady throws five touchdowns... in a single quarter. That 59-0 massacre was the signal that, OK, maybe the knee had healed. By the end of the regular season, Brady had led the Pats back to the playoffs and been named AFC Offensive Player of the Week three times, with the Pats offense posting an average of 397.3 total yards per game (second only to the 2007 team, which was unstoppable—nearly). When the season went into the books, Brady had earned his fifth Pro Bowl and made a baby with Gisele. Now that's how you do a comeback.

BACKUP
Glen Davis

If you were going to create the perfect bench player, you'd want a guy with guts. You'd want a guy with tenacity. You'd want a guy who refers to himself in the third person as "the Ticket Stub." Glen "Big Baby" Davis fits all those requirements. In Game 2 of the first-round series against the Heat, Davis dropped 23 points in a spot start for Kevin Garnett. Afterward, the man with many nicknames told reporters, "I just knew that the Big Ticket was out, and that the Ticket Stub had to fly in today.... Whenever they need the Ticket Stub, he'll be there." We take that as a promise that Davis is abandoning his other nickname, "Thumbs McGee, the Guy Who Gets in a Fight Inside a Car and Screws Up His Thumb for Two Months."

CLUTCH PLAY
Bergeron-to-Sturm to Win the Winter Classic

The 40,000 or so fans who bought tickets to the Winter Classic were taking a gamble—they could've spent New Year's Day watching the Bruins get clobbered while sitting in 33-degree puddles at Fenway. Happily, the Winter Classic delivered on the hype. The weather was clear, strains of "Sweet Caroline" rang through the air, and the Bruins beat the Flyers in dramatic fashion. After the B's came back to tie the game, Patrice Bergeron set up Marco Sturm less than two minutes into overtime. Sturm hit the back of the net, the crowd went wild, and the Bruins looked like the kind of gutsy team that might go home with the Stanley Cup. And on that note, how about that Winter Classic?

CRAFTY VETERAN
Tim Wakefield

We've given this award to Tim Wakefield before, but damn if the guy doesn't deserve it. Hell, Wakefield made his first All-Star team in 2009, 17 seasons into his career. If that's not a sign of extreme craftiness, we don't know what is, because you don't worry about finding Wake's name in the Mitchell Report. This spring, he notched his 2,000th strikeout and keeps going strong. Consider the spot start he made on May 23 against the Phillies, standing in for Beckett. Wakefield pitched eight shutout innings, proving that he's still one of the most underrated starters in the major leagues.

FEMALE ATHLETE
Kelly Smith

OK, she's a Brit. But as long as she's playing for the Breakers and not the Silly Nannies, Kelly Smith is our lady Beckham. Smith led the Breakers in points last year (six goals and two assists) despite the fact that she injured her knee in May. Smith probably would've cleaned house in the Women's Pro Soccer All-Star game, but she had a prior commitment—the European Championships. In fact, with all apologies to the U.S. soccer scene, it's Smith's overseas accolades that really stand out. She's been a finalist for the FIFA Women's World Player of the Year, a member of the English national team since age 16, and she scored four goals in four games in the 2007 Women's World Cup. So maybe she's kind of a ringer in the more modest world of U.S. soccer. We're OK with that.

MVP
Rajon Rondo

Before Rajon Rondo's rookie year, at the Celtics preseason lunch, Tommy Heinsohn pegged him as the most exciting new guy. In the interim, we've seen Rondo turn from a gun-shy kid—insanely athletic, but sometimes clueless on the court—into a one-man wrecking crew. During the Cavs series, Rondo stole the spotlight from LeBron James. During the Magic series, he somehow went from sprawled on the floor, going after a loose ball, to cutting to the hoop for a highlight-reel layup within about .3 seconds. We could go on and on. But suffice it to say: The Big Three are now the Big Four.

SPORTS

HUSTLERS
The Celtics

Let's forget Game 7 of the Finals. Please. But go back to the end of the regular season, and think about everybody's expectations for the Celtics. This might be difficult, because there weren't any. They looked like a mediocre team that'd get dismantled by Wade or LeBron or Howard, and choruses of "They never have the best player on the floor" followed them into the playoffs. Where they promptly began beating everyone. It was like a streetball hustle executed three times over, and it almost lasted all the way to a title. Which somehow makes the loss to the Lakers even worse. But, still, they gave us hope: The Celtics, despite their aging nucleus, looked like a team on the rise. When Kobe's washed up, the Lakers will be left with a collection of bearded Euros and a fan base that dresses like they robbed a Hot Topic. Take away the Big Three, and we'd still have Rondo, Davis and Perkins—and fans who don't wear sunglasses indoors.

OPPOSITE OF THE 2004 RED SOX
The 2010 Bruins

Well, now we know how the Yankees felt. Except the Yankees were never up 3-0 in Game 7, were they?

MIDDLE FINGER TO HEARTBREAK HILL
Robert Kiprono Cheruiyot

Two hours, five minutes, 52 seconds: Not only did Robert Kiprono Cheruiyot break the record for the Boston Marathon, he nearly broke the record for the marathon, period. Including those that have no hills. Cheruiyot even managed to give us a bit of scandal when he went up on the sidewalk to break out of traffic, like Bruce Willis in the taxicab in Die Hard With a Vengeance. Robert Cheruiyot: the Kenyan John McClane.

RECURRING INJURY
Vertigo, JD Drew

Memo to JD Drew: This is why people joke about you and your injuries. Vertigo? OK, we're not saying you don't get vertigo from time to time, but even if that's the case, tell the team doctor it's something else. Say you strained your biceps shotgunning Busch Lights with Pedroia. Whatever. Just don't allow an already cynical fan base to imagine you sitting in the locker room catching the vapors like a 19th-century Victorian lady. We like it when our guys sew cadaver tendons into their bodies so they can keep playing. We don't like it when they complain about a bad case of the spinsies. Or whatever it was that always afflicted Manny in July and August.

ROOKIE
Tuukka Rask

Tuukka Rask, the Bruins rookie goalie, might blow over in a stiff breeze—he's listed as 6'3", 169 pounds—but he knows a thing or two about stopping the puck. His save percentage of .931 was tops in the NHL, as was his goals-against average (1.97). He also wins in the nonexistent category of Best Name on the Bruins Other Than Satan.

SECRET WEAPON
Kevin Faulk

The definition of a secret weapon is a guy who's deceptively good. He isn't a player that other teams focus on in their pregame plans. He doesn't have a catchy nickname, crazy end-zone antics or endless public controversies. But when he makes an appearance, he efficiently dismantles his opposition. That's Kevin Faulk. He doesn't have the flash of Laurence Maroney turning the corner—when, uh, Maroney manages to do that—but when the Pats need four yards for a first down, you're always happy

SUBJECT OF HYSTERIA

David Ortiz

We can all agree that 2010 David Ortiz is not 2004 David Ortiz. But show the man some respect. The stats support the case that Ortiz isn't washed up, just horrendously streaky. Last year, he started slow (er, perhaps that's an understatement), then went on a hellacious tear near the end of the season. This past May, it happened again, when Papi was named AL player of the month after hitting .363 with 10 home runs. Most of that production came after the Boston Herald ran a headline that read, "Papi Unwitting 'Roid User?" To which we say, thanks, Boston Herald! Try to make him mad again right around September.

to see Faulk running in from the sidelines. Going into last season, do you know which NFL players had at least 2,000 rushing yards and 3,000 receiving yards since 2000? Only six guys: Tiki Barber, Marshall Faulk, Michael Pittman, LaDainian Tomlinson, Brian Westbrook... and our secret weapon, Kevin Faulk.

TEAM THAT'S MORE POPULAR THAN YOU THINK

Boston Blazers

Last April, 10,032 people grabbed seats at the TD Garden to watch the Boston Blazers lacrosse team beat the Minnesota Swarm. Maybe that doesn't sound like a huge crowd, but it's higher than the turnout at many NBA games—like a Feb. 2 Nets-Pistons match that pulled in a mighty 9,417 people. Take that, Jay-Z! You may have inflicted Empire State of Mind on us last year, but our lacrosse team can outdraw your NBA team.

TRADE

Justin Masterson for Victor Martinez

Assuming Justin Masterson doesn't prove to be the next Nolan Ryan, this trade made a lot of sense for the Sox. It addressed two of the team's needs: giving Jason Varitek a more appropriate role as the alternate catcher/team Yoda and bolstering the offense. On the latter subject, Martinez is a career .300 hitter (give or take a few points) and is usually good for 20 home runs. Those are the kind of stats you've probably got to trade for, because the farm system doesn't spit out 20HR/.300 catchers every spring. We say this was the best trade for a catcher since the one that brought us Varitek.

BILL MUELLER PLEASANT SURPRISE AWARD

Julian Edelman

Is he a quarterback? Is he a wide receiver? He's both, and possibly a punt returner and, who knows, maybe a kicker. Julian Edelman reminds us of Troy Brown—a guy who'll go in and do whatever he can, more expertly than you'd expect for someone playing out of position. After finishing the 2009 regular season tied for third on the team in receptions, the January face-off with Baltimore saw Edelman become the first Pats rookie to catch two TDs in a post-season game. Edelman also reminds us of Wes Welker. Because, well... they both majored in management in college.

PROBLEMATIC COMPOUND

H_2O

One month we're getting record rain, and people are traveling through Quincy in motorboats (if temperatures had dropped a little lower last March, it would've looked like the Donner Pass, circa 1847). The next month a huge pipe breaks, and suddenly we're mobbing the National Guard for a case of Poland Spring. Either way, cut the nonsense, water, because you're messing with the wrong city. Just ask your old friend, Back Bay, which used to be water, until it got out of line. Remember that.

CLARK ROCKEFELLER CON-MAN AWARD

Adam Wheeler, Harvard Student

You have to be pretty dumb to plagiarize in the Internet era, but you have to be pretty smart to lie your way into Harvard. So is Adam Wheeler—the 23-year-old accused of forging his transcripts and test scores, and bilking the college of tens of thousands of dollars in grants—a brilliant con man or a compulsive liar? Maybe both. Say, Harvard... you didn't let him near the endowment fund, right? Just asking.

DO-GOODER

David Cox, Executive Chef at the Capital Grille

If you've ever watched Hell's Kitchen, you know that executive chefs are busy people. However, with apologies to Mr. Ramsay, they're not always caustic megalomaniacs. Consider, for example, David Cox. When he's not working at the Capital Grille, Cox spends time as an instructor at the Community Servings Teaching Kitchen, helping down-on-their-luck adults acquire the skills they need to get a job in the restaurant biz. As an added bonus, he treats graduates to dinner at his restaurant.

HERBAL REMEDY

Weed

It's not legal, but it's not exactly illegal, either. You still can't buy wine in most grocery stores, but you can sit on a park bench and smoke your left-handed cigarettes—as the kids call their marijuana joints—without fear of much reprisal. While selling weed is still frowned upon, if you happen to get your hands on some, possession of less than an ounce isn't a criminal offense in the Bay-ked State (see what we did there?). If you're keeping score, we elected a conservative senator and also quasi-legalized weed. Massachusetts, don't ever change.

HIGH-PROFILE CAT

Jury Duty Cat/ Twitter Cat (tie)

Boston has no shortage of famous cats, which is what makes this category difficult to decide. So we have a tie. First, there was East Boston's Sal who made news when he got called to jury duty. Turns out he was included on a census form by his owner (we're not sure whether that's more of a commentary on the census or on cat owners). But Sal has a celebrity rival—a feline foe from Waltham named Sockington. This cat has, at last count, 1,514,527 followers on Twitter. And we do know what that means: Twitter is really, really stupid.

INSTANT CELEBRITY

SAD CLOSING

The Hong Kong

On Christmas Eve 2009, the Faneuil Hall Hong Kong was on fire. Literally. Apparently, an electrical short circuit in the ceiling started a blaze that engulfed timbers soaked in years of Scorpion Bowl fumes. Contrary to initial reports, the conflagration had nothing to do with $1 chicken skewers. By the time the flames were extinguished, they'd done $400,000 worth of damage. The owners swear they'll rebuild the place, but inevitably it'll be nicer than before, and that's a little bit sad. We hope they throw a bunch of bendy straws and teriyaki sticks on the floor, so the newly minted 21-year-olds can feel part of a proud tradition.

TED KENNEDY

after that, Jon Hamm is playing him on Saturday Night Live. Massachusetts hasn't had someone shoot to fame on the national stage so quickly since, oh, Ayla Brown.

LOCAL TV SHOW
Chronicle

Chronicle continues to impress for two reasons. First, the main segments are taped, but the studio interludes are live. Today Show viewers know that the latter is fertile ground for brain farts and logistical screwups. With Chronicle, you barely notice because it's so smooth. Second, even after the departure of long-time anchor Mary Richardson, the program continues to buck the trend toward short-attention-span bits targeted at chimps with ADD. Instead it lavishes attention on New England's out-of-the-way nooks, something nobody else seems to do anymore. Chronicle is the antidote to the 24-hour news cycle.

MOST MISSED, LITERARY
Robert B. Parker

Robert B. Parker wrote so many books—75—that we probably took him for granted. The creator of Spenser the private eye died on Jan. 18, at 77, and Boston is down another literary giant. His final work, Split Image, is the last we'll see of Jesse Stone and Paradise, Mass., but Parker lives on through his legacy. And who knows? Perhaps there's more waiting to be discovered. When Parker passed away, he was at his writing desk, trying to solve one more mystery.

MOST MISSED, SENATORIAL
Ted Kennedy

It's impossible to write an obituary for Ted Kennedy in the space of a paragraph, so let's just say that rarely does a politician own up to his humanity in the way that Kennedy did. He committed a colossal mistake early in his life and spent the rest of his career trying to make amends. And maybe, in the end, he accomplished more as a senator than he would've as a president. Whether you agreed with him or not politically, you have to respect the fact that Kennedy stayed on the job, with all its attendant public scrutiny and aggravation, when he could've spent his life sitting on his boat. Last year, Camelot finally came to an end.

PARTY YOU WEREN'T INVITED TO John Henry's Wedding

Traditionally, the bride's family pays for the wedding, but an exception can be made when the groom owns Fenway Park. And when John Henry married Linda Pizzuti, he decided to go all out. At the reception on the Fenway outfield, a band played Maroon 5 songs, which made sense, since the band was Maroon 5. While that party drew more than 400 people, the really exclusive ticket was the wedding itself, which took place in a more intimate, modest setting: aboard Iroquois, Henry's 164-foot yacht.

PLANE CONFRONTATION, LOCAL POLITICIAN
Mitt Romney vs. LMFAO's Sky Blu

While Barney Frank's midair run-in with the drunk optometrists was certainly entertaining, it can't match Mitt Romney's seatback battle with Sky Blu from the band LMFAO. Blu, fresh off a night you'd expect from a guy with a song called "Shots," wanted a little R&R on the plane. He put his seat back and threw a jacket over his face—it bears mention that said jacket was emblazoned with the words "Party Rock." The gentleman behind him took issue, since Sky Blu wasn't yet in the blue sky, as the plane was still on the ground. Blu wouldn't put his seat up, and a confrontation ensued. We're not taking sides, but when a guy with a Party Rock jacket is fighting with Mitt Romney on a flight from Vancouver, we're LOFAO.

REASON TO BE PROUD AND EMBARRASSED AT THE SAME TIME
Wicked Summer, the Jersey Shore for Massholes

We're the Hub of the world, with some of the most prestigious universities, cutting-edge hospitals, and even a financial company that managed to avoid both bankruptcy and congressional hearings (yay, Fidelity!). But what are we known for? Massholes. Our local species of bombastic goon has ruled reality TV for a long time—getting in televised fights is a local specialty (historical high points include Peter McNeeley vs. Tyson and wasted Mass. dude "CT" spicing up The Real World by getting in a fistfight in Paris). So the upcoming Masshole version of Jersey Shore, Wicked Summer, is a guaranteed hit. It feels good to be recognized as a noteworthy slice of American culture. It's just too bad that we're talking about this particular slice. Hey, say hi to your mother for us.

VITALIZED NEIGHBORHOOD

The Waterfront

Calling it "revitalized" just sounds wrong. Because this isn't a case of a down-on-the-skids neighborhood slowly transforming itself—it's more like, one day there's a parking lot, the next day there's a Louis Boston. Fan Pier is finally shaping up, while down the street you've got the new Atlantic Beer Garden and the Whiskey Priest—roughly doubling Boston's waterfront bar space between the two of them. On the other side of the World Trade Center, a new three-story Legal's is under construction, featuring a swank roof deck. The temporary (and perpetually packed) "Puma City," during last summer's Sail Boston event, demonstrated the demand for a few more spots in the Seaport District. Finally, they're here.

WORST PLACE TO MAKE OUT

The Common During the Tea Party Rally

From what we gather about the Tea Party Rally, the crowd was about 30 percent Tea Partiers and 70 percent reporters searching for stories about Tea Partiers. So, needless to say, that would've been a horrible place to make out. You probably would've been asked all sorts of earnest questions about liberty, or values, or something. Hey, man, leave me alone. I'm just trying to make out.

WEATHERMAN, BAWDY

Pete Bouchard

We love WHDH-TV Channel 7's Pete Bouchard. Here's a man who isn't afraid to go off the teleprompter, with occasionally hilarious results. Last January, Bouchard introduced a graphic report that Princeton had gotten pounded by a whopping snowfall. "The biggest amount that I could find—almost as big as me—about nine inches," Bouchard observed. That's what we want with our weather forecast: greatly exaggerated estimates.

ART SUPPLIES

Dick Blick Art Materials

Marking nearly a century in the business, this art-supply emporium seems to stock every paintbrush, easel and pencil in existence. Their annual catalogs are considered industry bibles, and a preferred customer card ($10) gets both established and budding Picassos 10 percent off (fee waived for students and teachers). Plus, a new framing and design center lets you bring in a JPEG of your awesome sad-clown drawing, print it on fancy paper or canvas, and distribute the finished product to all your friends.

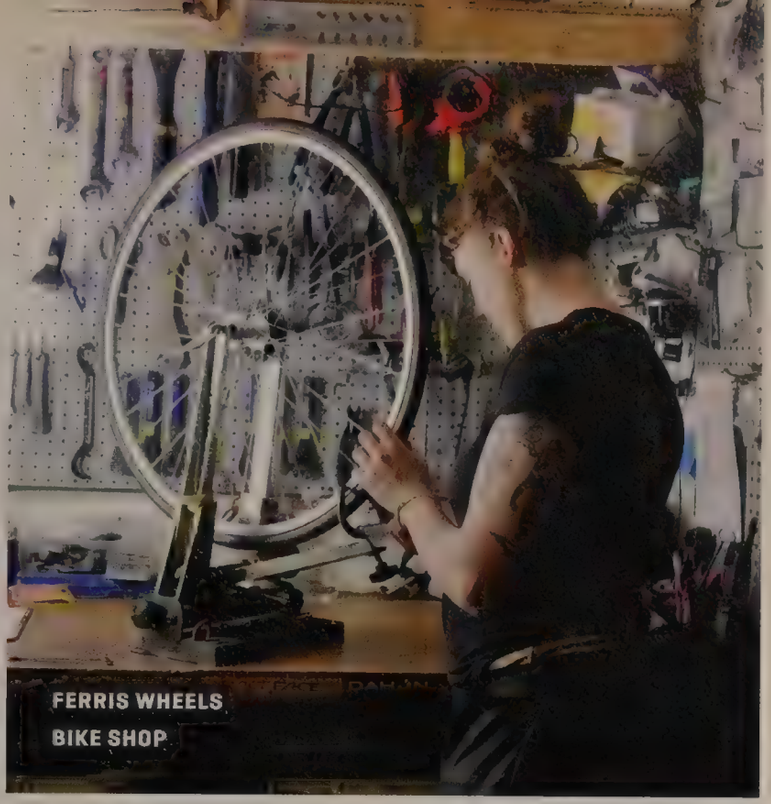
BIKE SHOP

Ferris Wheels Bike Shop



For 28 years, Ferris Wheels has been a hub of the Hub's bike scene. Although the in-stock selection numbers more than 150 two-wheelers, riders come from far beyond Jamaica Plain for the shop's repair service, the free "get to know your bike" and "fix your flat" workshops, cycling-themed movie nights, tours of local parks and 'hoods, women's fitness rides and advice on picking the best commuter routes. "Lots [of people] live here to give up cars and reduce car use," owner Jeffrey Ferris says. Ferris Wheels makes car-less dreams come true.

BOOKSTORE

Harvard Book Store

You already know this Harvard Square institution as one of the country's best-stocked places for new and used titles, as well as for an author series that features marquee names like Bret Easton Ellis and Salman Rushdie. Now it's also a lean, green bookselling machine with pedal-powered delivery service and a revamped store that consumes less energy. Even better: Aspiring authors can print and bind their oeuvres in minutes on a book-making robot aptly named Paige M. Gutenborg. Or they can simply print up one of the millions of Google Books digital titles and walk out with a spanking new copy of, say, A Progressive Grammar of the Telugu Language.

CATERING

Tables of Content

Microwaved mini-quiches be damned. Tables of Content will dazzle your guests with superior fare while leaving behind a tiny carbon footprint. As the state's only certified-green caterer, they compost and recycle, use local and sustainable foods, and even pluck basil and rosemary from their own herb garden. They do special requests, too: not just veggie and vegan weddings, but BBQs, pig roasts, clambakes and a food drop-off service called "TOC to Go." Fancy a "game night"? They don't mean poker, but venison, ostrich, boar and buffalo, all of it prepared chez vous.

VINTAGE FURNITURE

Machine Age

If your dream home comes in stainless steel, leather, teak and rosewood, make a pilgrimage to this 6,000-square-foot temple to design from the Mad Men era. Boasting New England's largest collection of mid-century furniture, artwork and lighting, collectors flock here for museum-quality specimens from Italy, France, Scandinavia and the United States, created by legends such as Florence Knoll and Eero Saarinen. Look no further if your idea of chic is a Papa Bear chair by Hans Wegner.

COURIER SERVICE

City Express

When you need to move something fast, City Express is the best bet in town. Using any mode of transport from foot to plane to donkey train, and with "next flight out" service, the state's largest locally owned courier can get a heart valve to California the same day (that's quicker than FedEx). They've even reunited left-behind eyeglasses with clients at the airport and Cape-bound weekenders with forgotten house keys at the Sagamore Bridge. That's service.

DRY CLEANING

Holly Cleaners

It's an hour before "I do" and jittery fingers have spilled a glass of red wine on your wedding dress. Holly can dispatch a cleaning pro to the church in time for you to walk, in perfect white, down the aisle. Renowned for outstanding service, including pickup and delivery, they also offer on-site drapery treatment and upholstery and rug cleaning. Their "green clean" program uses environmentally friendly solvents and recycles hangers and plastic bags. Neiman Marcus, Escada and Armani go to Holly. There's a reason why.

TAILOR

Beauge's Tailoring Alterations

Friendly, quality work is the watchword at this tailor to Government Center politicos and common citizens alike. Camille Beauge's alterations are so impeccable, some customers buy cheaper clothes and bring them to him for a nip/tuck. Ask him to "take in the waist," and he'll alter the entire leg—it's like getting a brand new pair of pants. He does wonders with everything from Brooks Brothers suits to North Face jackets, and can even make baggy, generic dress shirts look like they're from the pages of GQ.

FURNITURE

Mitchell Gold + Bob Williams

Fashionable but never overpriced, the furniture here is designed by the store's eponymous founders. Every six months, the showroom stocks fresh styles in seating, beds, tables, storage, rugs, lighting and accessories. Favorites return, too, but you can gussy them up in new clothes; there are some 300 fabrics and 16 leg stains to choose from. Customers can also bring in floor plans and fiddle, virtually, before making a purchase. Or hire one of their designers for a house call.

Nothing compares to Isis, transformed this year from a maternity store into a full-out "parenting center." In addition to vital gear such as strollers, toys and baby carriers, they sell infant shoes, pacifiers and sanity-saving gadgets like toilet trainers. Check out the roster of fitness and yoga classes, lactation consultations, hospital tours and a "Time for Dads" program, which teaches frightened fathers fun ways to interact with their babies. The accolades keep pouring in for Frank Rinaldi, a third-generation cobbler from Honduras who offers fast, reasonably priced shoe repair. He resoles, reheels, shines, stretches, makes orthopedic corrections, and mends zippers and handbags. Sometimes, he'll even do a quick fix for free. Lauren Genatossio at Sarra

A self-proclaimed "makeup dork," Lauren Genatossio got started in the business a decade ago with Laura Mercier. Her career has skyrocketed since: Genatossio has worked on models and celebrities, including Drew Barrymore and Laura Linney. But she most enjoys teaching "real women" techniques they can replicate at home. With her own product line, it's a sure thing.

WORKOUT CLOTHING

South End Athletic Company

Death to the boring white sneaker. At South End Athletic Company, owners Dan Fitzgerald and Justin Burdon have blanketed the wall with lime green, tomato red, electric blue and other colorful kicks. But don't let the stylish selection fool you—these guys know their stuff. Fitzgerald and Burdon, who met on Boston College's track-and-field team, hatched the idea for their store during a frigid 10-mile run. They carry apparel and footwear from Asics, Brooks, New Balance, the North Face, Saucony and more. Be sure to grab one of the soft hoodies and T-shirts Fitzgerald designed with the SEAC logo.

EXERCISE CLASS

Jennifer Phelan's Pilates Fusion Class

Jennifer Phelan recently quit marketing to teach exercise full-time. Her students at Equinox and North End Yoga thank her for it. In her popular fusion class, she mixes classic mat-pilates with dance-toning moves, while blasting tunes from Jay-Z and Lady Gaga. "We sweat and have a lot of fun," says Phelan, who shares her playlist with fans. "It's like you're in a nightclub. If you leave feeling refreshed and energized, then I've done my job right."

HAIR STRAIGHTENING

Lisa McLaren at Salon Marc Harris

Lisa McLaren has natural ringlets, but you'd never know it. McLaren calls herself the straightening guinea pig at Salon Marc Harris. Who better to tame your tresses? Based on firsthand experience, she prefers Simply Smooth, which uses botanicals like apple pulp and keratin from human hair for a gentler finish. The process ranges from 90 minutes to four hours, depending on length and thickness, and lasts four to five months. Don't have the time or money for a complete treatment? Try the faster and more affordable Brazilian blowout.

MEN'S HAIRCUT

Paige Enright at Mitchell John Salon

Paige Enright clips the hair of financial types: bankers, lawyers and real-estate execs who require a tricky mix of conservative and modern. "They want something they can do in five minutes," says Enright, a former art student whose mom owns a salon in Provincetown. She isn't afraid to work the scissors and razor to add texture, or to teach clients how to use styling paste or wax. She's a great conversationalist, too.

Owned by Hollywood producer Elan Sassoon and Lord's & Lady's founder Michael Barsamian, Mizu has lured top talent since opening in 2008. The staff can lighten your locks for summer with hair painting, adding color without foil, or tame the frizz with an express keratin treatment. Monica Salipante at Beaucage Salon and Spa

"If someone says, 'I'm so embarrassed,' I say, 'Oh please, doing this is like doing your eyebrows. It's not even an issue.'" Using hard wax instead of strips, Salipante swears that even the most sensitive skin has no problem. She'll take care of you from head to toe.

VENUE
Boston Public Library

You can't top the Boston Public Library for jaw-dropping architecture and unabashed grandeur—marble floors, high ceilings, murals, original tiles. Really, it's like getting married in an Edith Wharton novel. Weddings take place after closing time Fridays through Sundays, which adds an element of friskiness to the proceedings. Couples book at least nine months in advance and waive their right to certain whimsical touches (no open flames, for instance)—but it's a small sacrifice for this kind of splendor. TUXEDO

Louis Boston

Although brides buy gowns they only wear once, many grooms rent tuxedos they could wear again. Buck the illogical trend and purchase a tailored tux at Louis Boston. Owner Debi Greenberg emphasizes that one size (or cut) doesn't fit all. Under Greenberg's supervision, you'll find an updated style in a lightweight fabric (often nylon wool) with natural stretch, silk lapels and narrow pants. And her tuxes are matte black—never shiny, like so many rentals. Best of all: "We don't believe in cumberbunds."

HANG TIGHT

IF HE QUIT WORKING AS an artist, Charles LeDray could make a killing as a tailor to the Tom Thumb set. In addition to stitching two-inch suits, LeDray crafts small-scale versions of everything from intricate clay pots to detailed models of the solar system. A new exhibit demonstrates his talent for miniaturization, as in his sequence of scenes from used-clothing shops. The show opens at the Institute of Contemporary Art on July 16. KANDACE CORNELL-NADELBERG

The A-Team ★ ½ Stupid even by the low standards one must apply to an adaptation of a TV show starring Mr. T, Smokin' Aces director Joe Carnahan's noisy, loutish shoot-'em-up aims to please but merely grates. Slumming Liam Neeson waves a phallic cigar around as the leader of a cocky, covert ops team spending so much time laughing at their own jokes and high-fiving, it's unclear how they get anything else done. You'll want to slap the toothpick out of Bradley Cooper's smarmy smirk. District 9's Sharlto Copley hams it up incessantly as crazy pilot Murdock, and some idiot in casting had the bright idea to let Ultimate Fighter Quinton "Rampage" Jackson quote Gandhi. The action is poorly staged and impossible to follow, and everybody's having such a grand old time that nothing ever feels like it's at stake. The end result is a smug frat party with explosions. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Babies ★ ½ We get it, they're cute. Enough already. Lacking narrative, dialogue or really anything a reasonable person might expect when plunking down $10 to see a movie, Thomas Balmes' pseudo-documentary is just a lot of shots of babies acting like… babies. They coo; they warble; sometimes they cry. End of plot synopsis. Spending about a year or so following four tots from Mongolia, Namibia, Tokyo and San Francisco, the movie simply shows kids doing what they do. I guess the locations are meant to hint at some universal truth, like perhaps cultural and geographic differences don't matter all that much when you're a barely-sentient newborn. This rainbow coalition of cute kids behaves identically. They're all adorable until they get hungry or have to go to the bathroom. They're also boring. Spending time with babies you know can be a moment-to-moment journey of discovery and joy. But not when they're strangers. This isn't a movie. It's a screensaver. (In the suburbs.)

Exit Through the Gift Shop ★★★★ This remarkable, hilarious documentary from the secretive British street artist known only as Banksy begins as a slightly tedious story of an underground movement. Eccentric tagalong dilettante Thierry Guetta spent years chronicling the creation of spray-paint stencils that appeared on public walls from artists like Shepard Fairey and Banksy himself. But just when you think you've settled in for a routine hipster hagiography, Exit Through the Gift Shop implodes in spectacular fashion, as Banksy seizes control of the project from the incompetent director, and Guetta responds by setting the fickle art world on its ear with a million-dollar triumph of hype over substance. (This is the Adaptation of art documentaries.) Many are wondering if this is all a hoax, but if Exit Through the Gift Shop's droll, insistent provocations leave you asking questions about the thin line between artistic accomplishment and media manipulation, then it only rings more true. (At Kendall Square and West Newton Cinema.)

Get Him to the Greek ★★ Appearances to the contrary, Nicholas Stoller's follow-up to Forgetting Sarah Marshall is not technically a sequel. For starters, Jonah Hill plays a different character this time around, but the biggest departure is one of tone. You won't find the previous picture's gentle, inclusive spirit on display here. Get Him to the Greek is defiantly unpleasant, aggressive and gross. Sometimes it's amusing, but an icky aftertaste lingers. Hill stars as a schlubby, put-upon record company staffer who spends his days absorbing insults from his tyrannical boss (a monstrously funny Diddy) until assigned to babysit his debauched rock 'n' roll idol Aldous Snow (Russell Brand) on a road trip from London to L.A. What follows is a ramshackle collection of increasingly outré set-pieces involving booze, vomit, narcotics and ladies of questionable moral standards. Most scenes seem to feature some object or another being shoved into Hill's rectum, proving once again that anal penetration is comedy's new kick in the balls. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Grown Ups ★ Last year Adam Sandler gave the bravest, most revealing performance of his career, as a troubled, deeply unlikable comedian in Judd Apatow's underrated Funny People. As happens whenever Sandler ventures outside his comfort zone (Punch-Drunk Love, Spanglish) the audience recoiled, and now we must suffer another lazy retreat back to formula crap. The maudlin, sloppy and shockingly unfunny Grown Ups teams Sandler with pals Kevin James, Chris Rock, David Spade and Rob Schneider as childhood buddies reuniting for a weekend at a New England lake house. There's a screenplay credited to Sandler and Fred Wolf, but it feels more like a collection of pious speeches

FALLING STAR

Tom Cruise whiffs with his big-budget comeback attempt.

Knight and Day ★★
Starring Tom Cruise, Cameron Diaz, Peter Sarsgaard, Viola Davis and Paul Dano. Written by Patrick O'Neill. Directed by James Mangold. At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.

HE NEVER SHOULD'VE jumped on that couch.

Tom Cruise had a great run at the top of the box-office charts. For almost 20 years he was America's purest superstar. Of all the medium-talent hunks to head the A-List, Cruise was the savviest, teaming himself from the outset with brilliant filmmakers like Martin Scorsese, Stanley Kubrick, Steven Spielberg and Paul Thomas Anderson. Cruise even enlisted the likes of Brian DePalma and Michael Mann to direct his summer popcorn junk. Like the best movie stars, he has a very narrow range, but he never missed the sweet-spot of his limited abilities. Say what you will about Cruise pictures, they always had class.

Then one day he fired his publicist, catapulted off Oprah's sofa and revealed himself as a nutso who spoke scary nonsense. This alienated his die-hard fan base to the point where even my mom doesn't like Jerry Maguire anymore, because "Tom was rude to Matt Lauer." (If you want to remain appealing to women of a certain age, never mess with Matt Lauer. He's off-limits.)

After the Oprah incident—and a long and ugly publicity tour that led to a falling-out with both his patron Sumner Redstone at Paramount Pictures and his quasi-godfather Spielberg in the wake of the War of the Worlds fiasco—Cruise isn't getting a crack at top directors anymore. That's a shame, as he no longer has the chance to play flesh-and-blood characters, and now each movie turns into a meditative exercise on the legend and strange star aura that is Tom Cruise.

With just a few leaked YouTube videos, we've all seen Cruise go from Maverick the super-cool fighter pilot to a religious zealot more terrifying than Mel Gibson. He's primed to inherit Michael Jackson's throne once the inevitable tell-alls come rumbling off the presses. But you've got to give the crafty Cruise some credit: He understands his staggering PR nightmare and has been adjusting his career trajectory accordingly.

The comeback began with a heavily made-up, uncredited cameo in Ben Stiller's Tropic Thunder. Of course, Cruise was out everywhere taking credit for it, positioning the role as a wicked parody of his new nemesis, Redstone, which sort of defeated the point of being heavily made-up and uncredited. It might've even worked, had Stiller not brought Cruise back several times to repeatedly indulge in the "white-guy-incongruously-dancing-to-black-music" gag, which is a lame, tired joke.

And now comes Knight and Day, which I don't have much to say about except that it made me sad. In case you missed the desperate publicity blitz, Cruise stars as some sort of semi-cracked, rogue super-spy who falls into mayhem with Cameron Diaz's ditzy blonde civilian, and, allegedly, hilarious hijinks ensue.

They're not that hilarious. In fact, at a late-night screening, everybody watching the movie with me fell asleep for a brief spell, as if we were taking turns. The only cogent criticism came from the cinema's janitor, who, while emptying trash, sadly lamented: "Cameron Diaz looks awfully old now. Do you remember when she was hot? Have you seen The Mask?"

The gag here is that Cruise might be the one CIA agent who can save the world. Or he might be a deranged madman. What's a girl like Diaz to do when a gun-toting assassin keeps leading her into shoot-'em-ups at badly photographed Boston locations, maniacally assuring her that "Everything's gonna be OK"? They're chasing some sort of super-battery, which doesn't really matter, as the real pursuit here is the faded stars working overtime for your affection.

Slick dude that he is, Cruise has already refocused his career around the idea that America privately considers him to be a pants-peeing lunatic. So he tried to play that to his advantage by starring in a broad, boring romantic comedy that's bogged down at every turn with noisy, annoying action sequences and a plot that doesn't seem to matter even to its participants.

Cruise desperately wants you to believe that he's in on the joke. But Knight and Day's tragic opening-weekend returns argue otherwise. The last superstar who was as popular and beloved as Tom Cruise was Burt Reynolds. When they fall, they fall hard. ✖✖✖ about old-fashioned family values recited over sappy music cues, while former Saturday Night Live cast members halfheartedly ad-lib and try not to obscure the product placement. The comic's Happy Madison company has produced some slapdash features in the past, but particularly in light of Funny People's brilliance, Grown Ups feels like their lamest effort to date. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

How to Train Your Dragon ★★★ This is an unusually adorable CGI adventure from DreamWorks Animation, best known for the noxious Shrek series. Jay Baruchel voices a stumblebum Viking named Hiccup who aches to befriend dragons instead of slay them. Much to the chagrin of his Hagar the Horrible–looking dad (Gerard Butler, in his first tolerable movie), our young hero spends the bulk of the film cozying up to a moody creature nicknamed Toothless and teaching kids a valuable lesson about kindness conquering aggression. The story is a familiar one, with echoes of Avatar during the vertiginous 3-D flying sequences. But the movie is disarmingly sweet and strikingly well-crafted. Directors Dean DeBlois and Chris Sanders were responsible for Disney's charming 2002 oddity Lilo & Stitch. This one doesn't feel quite as fresh, but it gets the job done with rousing action sequences and a great orchestral score by John Powell. (In the suburbs.)

Iron Man 2 ★★ ½ This overstuffed and underdeveloped sequel to 2008's smash juggles at least four separate plot-lines, which wastes enormous amounts of our time piling on new characters and setting up so many potential sequels and spin-offs, the movie has no chance to tell a coherent story of its own. But personality goes a long way, and while still a colossal disappointment, Iron Man 2 at least offers the small pleasures of a ridiculously overqualified cast riffing off one another, whenever their clunky CGI suits aren't getting in the way. With the movie in his back pockets, a swaggering Robert Downey Jr. once again stars as drunken, narcissistic playboy Tony Stark. He's got some delightful screwball banter with Gwyneth Paltrow and a worthy nemesis in steely-eyed, monosyllabic Mickey Rourke. Sam Rockwell and Garry Shandling bring on superlative smarm, but this time around director Jon Favreau lets sequel-itis and thudding heavy metal

Thrill Ride: The Science of Fun proves that there's more to roller coasters than painfully long lines and the occasional upset stomach. drown out the zingers. (At Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

Jonah Hex ★ This notoriously troubled production finally emerges as a shockingly incompetent patchwork. A scant 81 minutes (including credits) cobbled together from the disparate work of multiple directors and countless screenwriters, the DC Comics adaptation about a snarling gunslinger (Josh Brolin) with supernatural powers veers and jerks its way through abbreviated, oftentimes contradictory, mini-scenes. Famous folks show up for a matter of moments before vanishing altogether. Hey, was that Will Arnett? Wait, is Aidan Quinn playing Ulysses S. Grant? According to the credits Michael Shannon is here, too, but I never spotted him. Second-billed Megan Fox has about 10 minutes of screen time as (surprise) a prostitute with a soft spot for Brolin's scarred outlaw. There's much ado about a blood feud between the title character and John Malkovich's monotone proto-terrorist, but nothing here makes any sense. An action sequence that's obviously an alternate ending is woven in as a recurring dream for no discernable reason. This is not a finished film in any releasable condition. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Micmacs ★★ For anybody who thought Amélie wasn't cute enough, director Jean-Pierre Jeunet finally disappears up his own twee-hole with a limp farce about the weapons industry, of all things. The resolutely uncharming Dany Boon stars as a meek video-store clerk hit by a stray bullet during a gangland shootout. Lurching about with a cap in his cranium, the hapless fellow stumbles upon an underground crew of metallurgically gifted circus performers—each bearing exactly one exaggerated character trait. They, for no discernible reason, all agree to help him pit rival Parisian arms dealers against each other. What follows is one elaborate Rube Goldberg contraption after another, with the wacky gang pulling off bizarre, Mission: Impossible break-ins that send the angry missile manufacturers into ever-escalating rages. Not for one moment is there ever a sense of danger, and the outcome is never less than jauntily certain. Despite Jeunet's elaborate staging, all these rigorously designed set-pieces come off more annoying than thrilling. (At Coolidge Corner and in the suburbs.)

A Nightmare on Elm Street ★ Here's another morally and intellectually bankrupt film from Michael Bay's Platinum Dunes horror-remake factory. Though described as a child killer in writer/director Wes Craven's original 1984 picture, we were always left to assume that Freddy Krueger was up to other things with the Elm Street kids. This version leaves out the ambiguity. It's telling of the filmmakers' diseased mindset that the only aspect of the story they choose to elaborate on is the history of Freddy's child molestation tactics. Upping the ante with sick flashbacks and shots of crying preschool girls with razor-fingernail scratches on their backs doesn't in any way enrich this particular saga. Giving Freddy a lair full of perverted Polaroids does nothing to make A Nightmare on Elm Street any scarier. It just makes the whole enterprise feel sick and tawdry, reminding you how wise Craven was to steer clear of that side of the story in the first place. (In the suburbs.)

Please Give ★★★ ½ Miles from the rancid, materialist chick-flicks that dominate the marketplace right now, writer/director Nicole Holofcener's films tend to favor behavior over plot. They work their way toward tiny epiphanies that feel grounded and true-to-life. Nothing much happens, but everything changes. Please Give is Holofcener's strongest picture since her offhandedly-brilliant debut Walking and Talking and stars Catherine Keener in a role that shouldn't be remotely sympathetic. Except Keener is one of the great actresses of our time and is able to convey untold vulnerability even while saying exactly the wrong thing at the worst possible moment. As a liberal, guilt-ridden Manhattan antiques dealer making a fortune on dead people's furniture, Keener is a flurry of rationalizations, overcompensations and random crying spells. Her desperate attempts at volunteer work come to hilarious, sometimes poignantly disastrous ends, as she slowly learns the difference between "compassion" and "pity." It's a deeply unflattering role, yet Keener is never less than captivating. (At Kendall Square and Waltham Embassy.)

Robin Hood ★★ Maybe the Kevin Costner version wasn't so bad after all? Ridley Scott's mega-budget prequel is a dreary slog through the aftermath of King Richard's crusade and has almost nothing to do with the tale upon which it's purportedly based. This is a glum saga where everyone acts sad, powerless and smelly between the pseudo-Braveheart skirmishes Scott tends to fall back on these days. And you can count on one hand the number of times Robin Hood fires his trademark bow and arrow. He's just another sad-sack with a sword caught up in historical intrigue, as if Scott decided to secretly make a sequel to his lousy Crusades epic Kingdom of Heaven and weasel it into production by calling it Robin Hood. (In the suburbs.)

Sex and the City 2 ★ "Shoes, money, outfits, shoes, vagina, money, shoes, jewelry, outfits, money, shoes." That's pretty much all I got out of this two-and-a-half-hour barrage of fetishized luxury items, crass behavior and materialism sadly misconstrued as female empowerment. After the redundant, happily-ever-after endings of both the TV program and the first movie, there's no reason for this sequel to exist besides money. So I guess it's fitting that Sex and the City 2 is about how ridiculously freaking rich these people are. Instead of a story, we watch the gals vacationing at a $22,000-a-night Abu Dhabi resort. Little occurs besides costume changes, and the movie periodically stops dead in its tracks for lengthy itemizations of the products on display. It's a cartoon Middle East, where women wear the latest haute couture beneath their burkas and mean, old religious dudes get huffy over Carrie and her entourage tramping around their city with their aging, leathery cleavage hanging out. The worldview is toxic and the excess so wretched that this feels like a Transformers movie for greedy, middle-aged slatterns. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Shrek Forever After ★ ½ I can't believe I've sat through four Shrek movies. The things I do for you people! With its bare-bones animation—the empty backgrounds bearing the distinct stink of a direct-to-DVD sequel—this latest desultory slog

attempts to reboot the series by positing an It's a Wonderful Life scenario. Mike Myers' charmless ogre gets fed up with all the burping, farting and pooping by his babies and longs for the more solitary existence of his old, undomesticated life. Dastardly Rumpelstiltskin (voiced by in-house animator Walt Dohrn, allowing you to hear cost-cutting measures in full effect) shows the titular ogre what life would be like were he never born, sending him off to wander around a blighted, dystopian Far Far Away. Shrek has to meet everybody all over again, an implicit acknowledgment that there's nowhere else to go with these characters except to start the entire series over from scratch. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Solitary Man ★★★ Leading with his swagger and dimpled chin, Michael Douglas carries himself like Hollywood royalty, yet always carefully signals chasms of inadequacy lurking just beneath the posturing. It's hard to think of another leading man who so convincingly gravitates toward human frailty, his characters constantly undone by lust, greed or threatened-white-guy privilege. Douglas is a much braver—and much better—actor than he tends to get credit for. Sadly, we haven't seen much of him over the past decade, save for bit parts in crap comedies. But there are always indies, and Solitary Man (directed by Brian Koppelman and David Levien) has been too-neatly designed as the Ultimate Michael Douglas Experience. Culling together echoes of the star's most iconic roles, it's a somewhat contrived, if ultimately irresistible, one-man show of arrogance, entitlement and aching vulnerability. Douglas stars as a once-prosperous New Jersey auto-dealership mogul who seems to have dedicated the past six years of his life to self-destructing in the tawdriest way imaginable. The movie wouldn't make sense with anybody else in the part. (At Kendall Square, West Newton Cinema, and in the suburbs.)

Splice ★★ All the sins are of ambition in writer/director Vincenzo Natali's horror exposé. It's the kind of movie that flirts with so many interesting ideas that if you squint hard enough, things won't seem quite so terrible. Adrien Brody and Sarah Polley star as rock-star genealogists, creating new life forms out of scratch in a pharmaceutical lab while sneaking around at night to make a human-animal hybrid. The Frankenstein parallels are already obvious without the stars being named Clive and Elsa, and before you can shout, "It's alive!" we've got a moody teenage lizard-chick taking her shirt off in front of daddy. Borrowing from David Cronenberg, the early sequences have a nifty allegorical zing and moments of dry wit. Alas, Natali's grandiose plans get the best of him in the second hour, with goofy plot turns transforming Splice into the soapy, sci-fi version of Woody Allen and Mia Farrow's breakup. Bad laughs and bloodbaths ensue. Nice try, though. (In the suburbs.)

Toy Story 3 ★★★★ So this year's summer blockbuster for adults turns out to be a contemplation of mortality and obsolescence starring a bunch of animated plastic toys. You might reasonably wonder if we critics ever get bored writing love letters to Pixar, especially when it comes to a long-delayed sequel that on the surface appears to be geared toward audience familiarity and 3-D price-gouging gimmicks. Yet these sons of bitches have done it again. Tom Hanks' cowboy Woody and Tim Allen's career-redeeming Buzz Lightyear find themselves put out to pasture once young Andy heads off to college. They're confined to a shabby daycare center that carries eerie echoes of senior-citizen homes across the land. What follows is a rousing jailbreak adventure with a tragic undertow, tackling serious questions of death and abandonment in a mature manner that would make Ingmar Bergman proud, if only he'd played with dolls. This is a treasure. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

RESURFACING

Sarah McLachlan bridges heartbreak with the return of Lilith.

THE BREAKUP OF A marriage usually leads to private rumination. But for Sarah McLachlan, it led to Laws of Illusion, her first album in seven years, and to the revival of Lilith, the all-female fest she's bringing to national amphitheaters this summer.

The Canadian singer/songwriter has built a Grammy-winning career by sharing personal insights in melancholy, ethereal songs. But drawing on her 2008 separation from drummer-husband Ashwin Sood, she mines raw experience in new tracks such as "Awakenings" (capped by the line "I'm not going to lose myself again") and "Forgiveness," to which she replies, "You're asking too much."

"Songwriting is very cathartic for me, and it's very much of a process of sorting through my emotions, not that I ever discover any great answers," McLachlan, 42, says from Vancouver Island before she goes surfing. "I went through a pretty crazy, tumultuous time the last couple of years and came out stronger for it."

She adds, "What I choose to reveal on my records is something I'm very comfortable with. I want to connect with people on a really human, visceral, emotional level.... You know, it's a selfish act at first for me to write these songs, but it's such a joy to be able to put them out there to the world and have other people I don't even know connect with them."

McLachlan should get plenty of empathy during the 35 dates on her first Lilith tour since 1999, featuring a large, rotating cast that includes Kelly Clarkson, Tegan and Sara, Cat Power and the usually stage-shy Carly Simon at the Comcast Center on July 30.

"We basically had the same mandate as last time, to ask all the artists from different genres of music that we liked," she says of the tour, which includes Mary J. Blige, Erykah Badu and Sugarland in other cities. "The first year 'round, we were dubbed the 'white-chick folk fest,' which was extremely frustrating.... So I'm very excited about the lineup this year."

"I went through a crazy, tumultuous time the last couple of years and came out stronger."

McLachlan says she loved the "sense of community" that Lilith spawned in the '90s. "It was incredibly inspiring to be part of that sisterhood," she recalls, "and I think it was beneficial for us as artists, and the audience as well. We all got to be part of something that was kind of bigger than ourselves."

The original Lilith was also huge at the box office during its 1997–1999 run, raising $10 million for social causes, in addition to surprising promoters who doubted whether an all-female bill could sell many tickets. "That was an old fallacy," McLachlan says, "and we blew that apart and definitely helped to let the industry know that women were, in fact, a powerhouse."

Of course, few acts are showing much drawing power this summer, and Lilith is facing its share of slow sales and "praying to the weather gods," she says. "We're going into a very tough climate, and I don't think we necessarily knew that was going to happen going in. I don't know if we would've reacted differently. We're just trying to make the best of the situation."

When she and her Lilith partners decided in 2008 to revive the tour, McLachlan also didn't expect to record a CD about marital heartbreak. Yet Laws of Illusion also spins upbeat tunes like "Loving You Is Easy," where she cries "I'm alive, I'm on fire," like a freed spirit. "It's really liberating to sing a line like that, because that's kind of how I felt," she says. "It's just nice to be back in the world and feeling good about myself."

Expect only a few new songs at Lilith, however. "I'm headlining a festival, which means I'm playing at the very end of a very long day," she says. "People don't want to hear new material. They want to hear the songs they know and love."

One of those tunes is "Angel," the aching ballad that McLachlan wrote after the fatal overdose of Smashing Pumpkins keyboardist Jonathan Melvoin. A centerpiece of her multiplatinum 1997 album Surfacing, it remains a favorite of hers as well. "I feel like that song really connects with a lot of people," she says, "so singing it and being part of that energy is powerful." ✖✖✖

Good Pedigree

Dog Days

Call it the artist's best friend. Massachusetts-born William Wegman has built a career on photographing the tail-wagging Weimaraner. A master of whimsical, yet oddly moving, canine compositions shot with a 20 x 24 Polaroid, Wegman comes to town for Inside | Outside at the Panopticon Gallery. He opens the new exhibit, featuring more than 30 works, on July 8. See it through Sept. 7. Laura Zarougian

REALITY DINING

TABLE FOR EIGHT (866-822-5348 OR WWW.TABLEFOREIGHT.COM) IS A SOCIAL INTRODUCTION SERVICE

Table for Eight replicates the way people used to meet by bringing people physically together to dine. Indeed, many members of this 20-year-old service are disillusioned on-line daters who are tired of the cat-and-clicking-mouse games of such contacts and their frequent deceptions. Table for Eight people span in age from late-20s to late-40s, with a smattering of baby boomers. Typical members have been busy cultivating their professional lives with an income averaging $73,000, perhaps figuratively married to their career but now considering the corporeal variation: 85 percent haven't been married yet and are childless.

The actual table—located at a restaurant like Sibling Rivalry, Cucci Cucci or Le Mistral—must be round, no harsh, excluding edges. This serendipity of strangers brought together has been compared to the gemütlich flavor of wedding reception dinners. You can dine with such scintillating types as physicians, lawyers, psychologists, and teachers and scientists from local prestigious universities. An initial phone interview involving 60 questions screens members and identifies interests, views and preferences.

Although friendship and networking are benefits of dining with new people, Table for Eight also boasts at least 60 engagements, that they know of, that have resulted from their restaurant get-togethers in the last five years.

Critical Mass As the most powerful restaurant critic in the country, Frank Bruni used a lot of fake names to avoid blowing his cover. In Born Round, the former New York Times reviewer reveals his true self. Steering clear of confessional clichés, Bruni divulges the details of his insatiable childhood hunger and his struggle with bulimia, describing ice cream from the Good Humor truck the way a sommelier discusses a fine wine. A LAND NOIR, NOIR AWAY

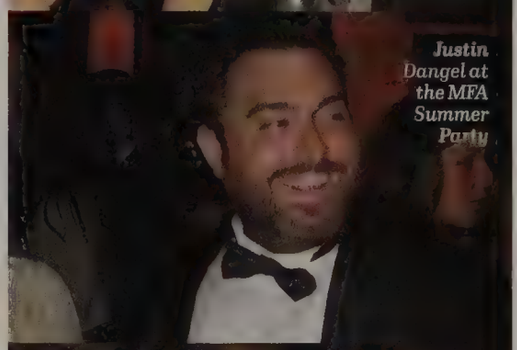
Balanced Nutrition

The theme was "classic noir," the dress code black-tie and the mood decidedly madcap when the Museum of Fine Arts held its annual Summer Party.

The swanky evening unfolded beneath the Sargent murals in the rotunda and the Old Masters in the central hall, and pretty much everyone was there, channeling their inner Barbara Stanwycks and Robert Mitchums. Present and accounted for: art dealer Jon Shore, gorgeous French export Catheline van den Branden, man-about-town Peter Creighton, expectant news anchor Frances Rivera and her handsome husband, Stuart Fraass, cosmetics mogul Coco Grace, clothier-to-the-stars Alan Rouleau, the chap from Chappaquiddick Justin Dangel, the breathtakingly beautiful Charlotte Ross, BSO babe Nina Jung, PBS stud muffin Jared Bowen and countless other bright young things, who ingested, imbibed and danced the night away.

"I love parties at the MFA," observed one guest, "because if the people bore you, you can always look at the art."

However, the evening's most amusing remark came from the person who ordered a martini, very dry, straight up, with a twist, took a sip, and said, "Mmm! Vitamins, minerals and vodka!"



Turning Frowns Upside Down

An intimidatingly attractive crowd, flashing blinding Pepsodent smiles, turned out for the Tooth Fairy Ball, held at the Franklin Institute to benefit the Forsyth Institute, which provides free dental care to underprivileged kids.

The event featured a best-smile contest (with categories that included "Most Mona Lisa") and wines paired with an artisanal-cheese tasting. (Get it? "Say cheese!") Among the inordinately good-looking crowd were InterContinental cutie Liz Driscoll, real-estate hotties Levi Reilly and Carolyn Hern, the beyond stunning Ssanyu Nutt-Birigwa, babe-a-licious brunette Katherine Armoutsoglou, tech vixen Jessica Corlett and Gallic funboy Tristan Govignon (both serving as judges), the ever-sexy Thom Delahunt, who came out of retirement to DJ the party, and one woman who said, "Let me think about it. I'm going to the bathroom, and that's where I do my best thinking."

"I love parties at the MFA," observed one guest, "because if the people bore you, you can always look at the art."

"This is an interesting party because none of the faux-cialites are here," another gal added. "You know who I mean: those totally delusional narcissists who think they belong on the cover of Vanity Fair?"

True enough, but, that said, one guest was overheard whining: "My sister sold her house in the Hamptons. Now what am I supposed to do all summer?"

Punk'd

By far the best practical joke we've seen recently: Devilishly clever real-estate developer Peter Georgantas and his partner-in-crime, Steve Kempainen, broke into their friend's house one weekend while he was away. "He has the best deck on Beacon Hill facing the river," Georgantas says. "It's got an outdoor kitchen, gas fireplace, TV, living room, dining area, etc. So we added the only thing it was missing..."

Now it also has a wicked pissah view. ✖✖✖

School Ties

My husband and I made a game of spotting schools when we first moved here. Not biggies like BU or Harvard, but the random and unexpected ones. Rittners Floral Design, in a brownstone on a leafy street in the Back Bay, probably delighted us the most.

Since then, my interest has shifted from the places to the impressive people they attract to Boston. Call me a literary nerd, but I like the idea of Junot Díaz teaching at MIT. The Pulitzer Prize–winning author and four of his peers take us inside their offices this issue.

I'm also an admitted gleek. That show had me from the pilot episode. In its case, we've exported our local talent: Soon after our cover shoot, comedian Mike O'Malley got an Emmy nod for his guest role on the series. And then he got named a regular cast member. It's back to school for him.

Head That Wears the Crown

YOUNG ACHIEVER

AS THE MOST accomplished 24-year-old to ever don a tiara, Miss Massachusetts 2010 Loren Rabinowitz is best known to the world as a champion figure skater, a member of both the U.S. national and world teams from 1999–2006. "In high school I was out of the country so much, so it was wonderful to be entrenched in Harvard life," says the two-time state piano champion. Furthermore, "I've always been fascinated by biomechanics," which explains why she graduated in May with an honors degree in English and premed. Between pageant duties she's applying to medical school and hoping to publish a book of poems she wrote while working at Mount Auburn Hospital, where she continues to volunteer. The explanation for all this: "My mom was smart. She kept us very active." ANDREW RIMAS

Good Eats

Cold Comfort

Chef Youji Iwakura has changed tack from his previous gig. Instead of the all-sashimi menu at Uni, his new kitchen at Basho, Fenway's palatial Japanese "brasserie," benefits from his sheer variety. A whopping eight-page list — including dozens of maki rolls, skewer-grilled meats and ramen — lures in even the most sushi-squeamish diners. That said, the best stuff is clustered in the cold appetizer section — in particular, the lobster ceviche, bathed in a yuzu-based dressing spiked with pineapple and citrus juices, fresh Thai chiles, garlic and cilantro. Wine

SPAIN WINS

When it comes to wine, Spain follows its own path. Each of the country's 60-plus regions grow indigenous grape varieties, with comparatively few plantings of those that dominate the international market. While long associated with good red wine, the country has generated excitement lately over a handful of white grapes that originate in its moderately cool northwestern climate. Modern production techniques are enabling skilled winemakers to breathe new life into these traditional varietals.

MASTER OF WINE SANDY BLOCK IS VICE PRESIDENT OF BEVERAGE OPERATIONS FOR LEGAL SEA FOODS.

↑ Bodegas La Cana "Albarino"
Rías Baixas, 2008 ($19, Marty's Liquors). Albarino is the star Spanish white grape in the United States. Originating on the Atlantic Coast in Galicia, it makes a very aromatic but ephemeral wine—one to drink young with shellfish or with gazpacho. La Cana is florally perfumed and bracing with a burst of lemon-lime freshness, although it also tastes a bit less spritzy than others I've had. It's ideal for winding down on a hot summer day.

↓ Bodegas Godeval "Godello" Valdeorras
2008 ($18, Bauer Wine). From neighboring Valdeorras (Valley of Gold), Godello is pear-scented and richer than Albarino, with a smooth, lush texture. The grapes for this highly aromatic wine are grown on hilly, low-yielding slate and limestone soils. Balanced by peach-pit spice accents and a hint of lemon peel, it's a lovely match with grilled or fried scallops.

↑ Txomin Etxaniz
Txacoli, 2009 ($29, Winestone). Winning top honors as the least pronounceable label on earth, Txacoli (pronounced "Chacoli") is a true phenomenon. Made from an obscure local variety, hondarribi zuri, grown only in the unimaginably beautiful Basque Country hills, it's a brilliantly citric, green apple, spritzy wine that will elevate just about any seafood dish. Ceviche is a particularly favorite partner. Brash in flavor but low in alcohol, serve this very chilled.

↓ Shaya, Old Vines "Verdejo"
Rueda, 2009 ($15, Marty's Liquors). This is from a warmer region to the east; it's rounder, with a bit more body than the others, but no less expressive fruit. Rueda's high-altitude vineyards are planted on chalky soils, imparting freshness and subtle minerality. Some Spanish-wine insiders consider verdejo the finest white grape in the country, and this one's exuberant acids balance the ripe, gentle fruit beautifully. It has enough substance to work wonders with a lobster salad.

Happy 25th birthday to a wonderful, one-of-a-kind Italian boy who has made my last real summer truly unforgettable:

Whether we're wandering the North End, hanging out in the infamous Brighton "orphanage," conversing by that window seat at Boloco, or watching fireworks atop a Fenway bar, you continue to sweep me off my feet. You are inspiring, hilarious, loving, intelligent and "dope," and I'm always smiling like an idiot when I'm with you. As much as I hate on the camo shorts and your sneaker collection, you still accept me in all my stubborn, bratty glory. So here's to the rest of this summer—spent eating like maniacs, being inappropriately goofy, breaking out in song mid-conversation, tweeting inside jokes and learning new vocabulary from each other.

Your #1 fan (in a soon-to-be "Empire State of Mind")

Dear sidewalk hogs:

Sidewalks were meant to be shared. I'm sick and tired of having to maneuver my way around rude individuals who can't give me adequate space. Do you really need to walk in a horizontal row? Must you travel like a herd of cows? Must you walk at lightning speed and run over everyone? Pick a side instead of walking in the middle. At this point I really want to knock you upside your heads with my 7 lb. pocketbook.

Running out of space... and patience

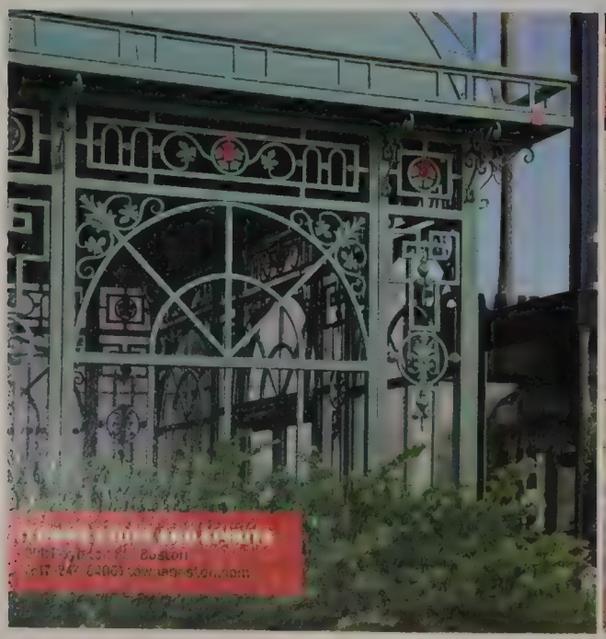
Going Out



Talent Show

Towne Stove and Spirits is big. Thirteen-thousand-square-feet, inside-a-convention-center big. It includes three dining areas, three bars, floor-to-ceiling windows and chandeliers resembling riverboat paddle wheels. Then there's the two-story kitchen, the second-level salon encased behind a wall of glass, giving diners in plush red leather booths a look at the action.

Jasper White and Lydia Shire are the stars of the show. The two friends and figureheads of the Boston restaurant scene—who last cooked together in the early '80s—joined to create a menu that mixes local favorites like clam chowder and lobster rolls with an array of international dishes: Turkish tadiq, Malaysian paratha, Russian rib roast. In the spare-no-expense kitchen, there's a tandoor, a Peking duck oven and a wood-fired rotisserie large enough for an entire hen house. The two names on top carry a lot of clout, and it seems investors would have ponied up for an in-house fire pit if they'd asked for one.

Although Shire and White will act as culinary directors, it'll be chef Mario Capone playing with the toys each night. Having worked with Shire since 1989, Capone is ready to help his bosses put on a show. "We're on display," he says. "Everyone dining is going to be watching us like it's theater." And while all eyes are trained on the kitchen, the hope is that by this week's grand opening, the team will be prepared to please every kind of appetite. "The sophisticated diner that wants foie gras, maybe someone in the convention that wants a slice of the rib roast, we're going to have quite a range. We've created a menu that'll accommodate them." NICK ALTSCHULLER

LEAP OF FAITH

Jason Bond goes solo.

AFTER BUILDING HIS reputation as chef de cuisine at No. 9 Park, then polishing it at Beacon Hill Hotel & Bistro, Jason Bond is making the leap to opening his own restaurant.

Bondir (French for "to leap or jump") will come to Cambridge this October at the site of the former Con Sol on Broadway. Bond says the 28-seat spot has "a lot of potential," although now it's a "dark little space," albeit with a fireplace.

He's eager to be on his own, without the daily grind of three meal services. "I'll be cooking with one assistant—a dishwasher/prep cook—and I'll be focused on one service," he says. "I'll make everything myself; I'll taste every single thing that leaves the kitchen."

As for the food, it will be "very similar to what I do now. I've got my chicken source lined up." In addition to dinner, Bond plans to offer private breakfast and lunch parties and daytime cooking classes.

JACKY ROBERT CONTINUES TO EXPAND his "petit" empire: Petit Robert Central should be open by early August in the former Vinalia space on Arch Street. The space is being completely redone, and the chef will be Eric Bogardus, who was Robert's sous chef at Locke-Ober back when Lydia Shire first took over the Boston institution.

BYE-BYE MARGARITAVILLE: The Cottonwood Café in Back Bay has closed and is looking for a new location.

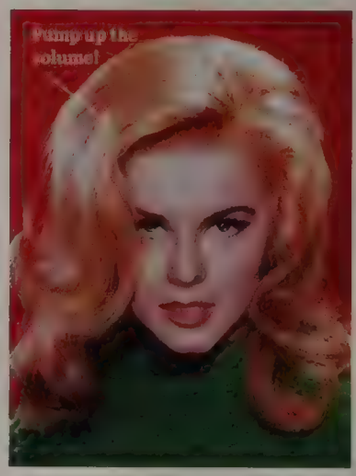
Drink of the Moment

Night Time

Noche, a new restaurant on Appleton Street, immediately impresses—not with service or cuisine, but with carpentry. The reserved, country-club decor of Icarus has been wholly revamped into a venue designed for glitz. With a white bar, radiant lighting and reflective surfaces, and resembling what manager Geoffrey Arvanitis calls a "laid back, subterranean speakeasy," it lures evening crowds down to the basement with a promise of something brighter.

There's an element of glam, which is seen in a cocktail menu that, bucking trends, looks not to the 18- but the 1990s. Arvanitis says, "There's a movement in the industry toward classic cocktails, and we wanted to open with something different." The drinks are on the sprightlier side, with some far-reaching curiosities—the Peanut Butter Cup ($12)—balanced with options like the Flower Blossom ($11), featuring a hibiscus blossom encased in bubbles, a little flash in a glass aiming to lure eyes and elbows to the bar.



Noche's opening signature cocktail, THE SOUTH END ($11), combines Stoli O, Chambord, strawberry juice, lime juice, mint and soda. It's light and fruity, but with enough sour punch to keep the flavor assertive. It's a great patio drink on a hot summer day, or with seared tiger shrimp ($12) at 1:30 am, as Noche's kitchen stays open late. Either way, with the neighborhood nod, Arvanitis hopes the restaurant shows that "we're part of the community, and we're here for the long haul."

Problems and Solutions

The brainiacs over at MIT are known for their technological breakthroughs. If you were to go on the Langer Lab's website and look under "research," you'd find bullet-pointed works in progress like "investigating the mechanism of release from polymeric delivery systems with concomitant microstructural analysis and mathematical modeling." Feeling smart yet? Shh, it's OK... let's talk about hair. What isn't mentioned is that professor Robert Langer and his team are hard at work, ready to release their new thickening products as the scientists behind the Living Proof hair care line. This September, they'll debut a shampoo, conditioner and root-lifting spray designed to target women who struggle with limp, lifeless coifs. The key is their use of polyfluoroester molecules rather than silicones, which can weigh hair follicles down. Why didn't we think of that?

AMANDA KNORR

There's a tendency in all languages to narrow things down, and it's happened throughout history. Why say Alexander Rodriguez when you can say A-Rod? The word "good-bye" is a shortened version of "God be with you." All the silent letters in English were once pronounced. It's inevitable. If language didn't change, then we would still be talking like Beowulf.

Jam Session

At Sofra, pastry chef Maura Kilpatrick uses her seasonal "spoon sweets" to cut through tangy Greek yogurt parfaits, while at Oleana, various dairy-based desserts—milk pudding, pistachio pot de crème—get a dollop of fruity preserves. Now that summer fruit is peaking, look for raspberry jam, gelled with green-apple pectin, and nectarine-fennel conserve—one of Kilpatrick's favorites that made its debut alongside her delicious nougat ice cream. Better yet, try them yourself at home.

ELIZABETH BOMZE

POT HEAD Kilpatrick's preserves

GREEN-APPLE PECTIN Makes 1 ½ quarts

- 3 ½ pounds (about 7) green apples, rinsed
- 6 ½ cups water
- 4 ½ cups sugar
- juice of 1 lemon

1. Remove stems and cut apples in quarters without peeling or coring.
2. Bring water and apples to boil in large saucepan or Dutch oven. Reduce heat and simmer 30 minutes.
3. Pour fruit into fine-mesh strainer, then strain juice through cheesecloth into separate bowl.
4. Combine 4 ½ cups apple liquid with sugar and lemon juice in a saucepan. Bring to boil and cook on high heat 10–15 minutes, skimming as needed. (Do not overcook or the jelly will add apple flavor to preserves.)

RASPBERRY PRESERVES Makes 5 cups

- 2 ½ pounds fresh raspberries, unrinsed
- 3 ½ cups sugar
- juice of 1 lemon
- ¾ cup homemade green-apple pectin ← recipe left

1. Combine raspberries, sugar and lemon juice in large shallow pot. Bring to boil, then reduce heat to medium. Keep at low boil for 5–10 minutes, stirring occasionally. Skim foam off surface as needed.
2. Stir in apple pectin. Bring to boil for 2–3 minutes, continuing to skim foam off surface.
3. Pour jam into a shallow pan to cool.

NECTARINE-FENNEL PRESERVES Makes 4 cups

- 2 ½ pounds (about 8–10) nectarines
- 2 ½ cups sugar
- ¼ cup honey
- ¼ cup lemon juice
- 1 teaspoon orange peel, finely grated
- 2 teaspoons fennel seeds, ground
- 1 ½ teaspoons orange-blossom water

1. Cut nectarines in half and then slice each into 6 chunks. You should have 1 ½ pounds of fruit.
2. Combine all ingredients in large bowl. Stir well. Let fruit sit at room temperature for 3 hours to macerate, stirring occasionally.
3. Strain liquid into a shallow saucepan and set nectarines aside. Bring juices to a boil for 5–6 minutes over medium heat. (Do not caramelize.) Add reserved nectarines and bring to boil. Continue cooking on low boil for 3–5 minutes, skimming off foam as needed.
4. Immediately pour preserves into a shallow pan to cool in a single layer. Stir in orange-blossom water.

DRINKING SONG

Lyrically lost in liquor

THE TITLE LIT TILTS TWO ways—referring both to drunkenness and to literature. Married to an upper-class poet and the mother of baby Dev, Mary Karr embarks on a writing career and begins to drink like a fish. But this fish, colorful and exotic, can swim in the English language with extraordinary fluidity. Karr's downward swoop into alcohol scares her little boy and distances her husband. Her crazy mother, made famous in The Liars' Club, adds additional spice. Some salty living, a suicide attempt and a downward slide into a hospital darken the landscape. Then, finally, along comes AA.

But Karr's wildly resistant to it, even comically so; the steps, the "g" word, prayer. Somehow, though, she stands away from her own willfully stubborn drinking self with skepticism, at once a rebellious teenager and her own stern critic. A guardian pal she names "Joan the Bone" sticks by her, delivering deadpan wisdom that Karr refutes and mocks, but her disturbing irreverence is rendered with poetic wit. This tension between the two women, and within herself, gradually does its bumpy work and eventually sobriety does arrive, bringing, surprisingly, Catholicism with it. ✖✖✖

Lit
by Mary Karr

Karr's memoir takes place in Cambridge.

"Suicide as an idea seeps into your lungs like nerve gas. No precipitating event prompts my fixation on dying, just the dull racket of my head's own Chihuahua-like bark—death death death. It becomes the one rabbit hole that will hide me: I can just cease to be. Picking up a drink would betray everybody who's poured effort into my sobriety—like my suicide wouldn't? But death—now, there's a one-stop-shopping idea. Over the months, I start to convince myself that Dev'll be better off without me (a grotesquely self-indulgent notion no parent can afford)."

CLASS ACT

Bergamot is out of the way but definitely worth the trip.

CLASSY. THAT'S THE WORD for this new star in Boston's culinary firmament. From its chic decor to its creative menu to its friendly, informed service, Bergamot establishes itself as a serious contender in the competition to woo discriminating customers. Chef/owner Keith Pooler, formerly of Harvest and Scampo, seems to have nailed it on his first try.

In the refined dining room, black chairs and tables topped with white cloths share space with a Victorian sofa and a hanging mirror. On the opposite wall, a lovely, multipanel painting of blossoms lends a splash of color. The discernible bustle from the open kitchen heightens one's anticipation for the meal ahead.

Delectable amuse-bouches—bass rillettes one night, foie gras another—and excellent house-baked baguettes preceded splendid first courses. Roasted baby beets ($10) arrived in small spheres, tangy pickled cubes, earthy slices and ground with walnuts, all boasting a summery sweetness. Continuing the variety theme, "Duck, Duck, Duck Salad" ($11) showcased the bird's glory in three ways—an intensely flavorful confit, a slightly smoky cured breast and a crispy, pleasantly salty crackling—with frisée, Spanish sheep's milk cheese and a sherry-vinaigrette emulsion. A worthy rival to the duck, sole escabeche ($12) brought three small filets bathed in a balsamic vinaigrette then lightly breaded, fried and topped with aged prosciutto, fava beans, pine nuts and egg-salad dressing—a felicitous symphony of flavors and textures.

Of the main courses, the roast chicken ($22), often a reliable indicator of a chef's skill, earned high marks. The plump Giannone bird's moist and flavorful meat was complemented by deliciously bitter braised endive and soothingly starchy parsnip puree, while ground ham and Chinese dipping sauce with green garlic enlivened the ensemble. Nutty, sweet and perfectly pan-seared sea scallops ($24) came cosseted in a bed of peas, cipollini onions and pancetta atop a cumin-scented carrot sauce. Finally, roasted American lamb loin ($27), tender and rare, offered a robust counterpoint with its full-bodied flavor. The accompanying maitake mushrooms, caramelized spring onions and farro risotto—supplemented with an unexpected offering of fresh fiddlehead ferns as a side—made this a major feast.

Charles' picks

Chili chocolate pavé

Though desserts seemed almost unnecessary after these triumphs from the kitchen, the guajillo-chili chocolate pavé ($10), a long rectangle of dense chocolate with a scoop of milk-stout ice cream and a dollop of apricot-caramel sauce, brought the curtain down on the production quite brilliantly.

Bergamot's slightly pricey wine list offered some interesting choices, including a 2006 Schoenheitz Herrenreben Riesling ($39) from Alsace, its flowery aroma and vibrant fruitiness balanced by food-friendly acidity. By the glass, I preferred the 2009 Vin de Pays du Var ($8), a simple, refreshing rosé, to the 2007 Chateau Saint Martin de la Garrigue "Bronzinelle" ($10), a Languedoc red blend heavy on the grenache.

Whether Bergamot will succeed in this market is difficult to gauge. Its location near the Somerville-Cambridge line may pose a challenge, as it's off the beaten path for many diners. (Which may be the reason that the former occupant, Evoo, decamped for Kendall Square.) But if there's any justice to be had in the restaurant world, the outstanding quality and reasonable prices should make it a winner. ×××

STOCKHOLM SYNDROME

The girl is a drag, and she has a tattoo.

I'M ON A PLANE, and the passenger next to me eyes my book—Stieg Larsson's The Girl With the Dragon Tattoo. She says, "Oh, I just finished that one, and I'm on the second one. Isn't it great?" This question puts me in an awkward position. Because, no, I don't think it's great. In fact, I think it might be the worst book in the English language.

I ordered Larsson's blockbuster because I'd heard so much about it and figured it must be pretty good to achieve such widespread popularity. Boy, was I wrong. Or, as Stieg Larsson might've put it, "Ezra was excited he had ordered the book, as excited as he could have been in the passive voice. But his excitement was as misplaced as a buffalo at a boat show." And yes, "as a buffalo at a boat show" is an actual simile from the book. It's also probably the most inspired prose in the first 100 pages.

The Girl With the Dragon Tattoo was originally written in Swedish, and the English version reads as if it were translated by Google and edited by a Pomeranian. Actually, correction—that would imply that it's been edited at all. If jarring lapses in logic distract you from a story, then TGWTDT will pose some challenges.

For instance, on page 18, we're learning about the protagonist, Mikael Blomkvist. Larsson likes to make sure we're well-informed on everyone's real-estate holdings, so we find out that Mikael bought his apartment during "the go-go eighties" from a guy who had to move out because he "suddenly got a job at a dot-com company abroad." Right. Remember the '80s dot-com boom? I illegally downloaded lots of Tiffany and Flock of Seagulls to my tape deck. If that seems sloppy, we later learn that Mikael also has a summer house "worth millions," a "cottage of 270 square feet." Unless somebody missed a decimal point, that means his summer house is the size of a generous parking spot. No wonder he's such a tormented soul—his feet stick out his front door when he sleeps.

The book's namesake, Lisbeth Salander, gets more generous character development. Let me summarize: she's a cute Goth chick. How cute, though? "Her extreme slenderness would have made a career in modeling impossible."

Judge this cover.

It reads as if it were translated by Google and edited by a Pomeranian.

So the only thing holding her back from a modeling gig is her... slenderness? You know, I watch a lot of America's Next Top Model (I mean, my wife watches a lot of America's Next Top Model), and Tyra is always saying, "You could be a model, if only you weren't so slender."

But anyway, fine. She's an almost-model in the looks department. That's page 39. You've got your mental image of Lisbeth Salander—she's like Kate Moss with black lipstick. Fast-forward to page 113, and Larsson throws in one more detail about his title character: "She herself was four feet eleven and weighed 90 pounds." I'm no fiction expert, but isn't it a bit strange to wait 74 pages to mention that your title character is a dwarf? Seriously—the Little People of America defines dwarfism as "an adult height of 4'10" or shorter, among both men and women, although in some cases a person with a dwarfing condition may be slightly taller than that." If Stieg Larsson wrote The Autobiography of Malcolm X, page 113 would include the line, "Malcolm X was black."

OK, some books are driven more by the plot than by characters. But the plot is also stupid. One crucial part of the story concerns a heating-oil truck that flips over on a bridge to an island. Nobody can enter or leave the island, because the truck might explode—"it would have been the same as climbing over a bomb." The only problem is that heating oil—aka, diesel fuel—doesn't explode. Even the dumbass Times Square terrorist didn't fill his Pathfinder with heating oil. Maybe diesel is more explosive in Sweden.

The truck plays a pivotal role early on, as we learn during Mikael's lengthy conversation with a mysterious old man I call Old Man Exposition. This guy is gonna tell us the whole sordid story that drives the book. But not right away, because this wizened Swede is in no rush to move things along. Mikael, like the reader, wants to know what's going on. He says, and I quote, "I'm mostly curious about why I'm here," "Why me? What makes you think I'd be able to help you?" "What exactly is it you want me to do?" "Tell me what you want," "Tell me what you want me to do," "Tell me what this job involves," "What are you getting at?" and "What is the real objective?" Finally, eight pages later, Larsson decides we've had enough SUSPENSE, and Mr. Right-to-the-Point says, "What I want is for you to solve a mystery."

Like Mikael Blomkvist, I've got some questions. How do Random House editors ignore sentences like, "What do you want to revenge?" How does a writer manage to use the words "was" and "has" 13 times in a half-page? Why, in a book originally published in 2005, does Larsson explain what an iPod is? When he writes, "They had lain head to foot for hours and talked about the future," does that mean that two people were talking to each other's feet, 69-style? When a character says, "Forgive me for bothering you like this unannounced, so to speak," why does he add the "so to speak"?

Are you dying to read this book yet? Well, then let me provide you with a pulse-pounding excerpt to stoke your excitement: "He had hesitantly plumped for the Social Democrats, there being nothing in his imagination worse than three more years with Gösta Bohman as finance minister and Thorbjörn Fälldin (or possibly Ola Ullsten) as prime minister. So he had voted for Olof Palme, and got instead the assassination of his prime minister plus the Bofors scandal and Ebbe Carlsson." Whoa, be careful you don't get paper cuts from turning the pages so fast.

I think the Swedish chef from the Muppets was more articulate than Stieg Larsson. "Bork bork bork, a dead body! Bork bork!" But if you enjoyed this book, then I have some additional reading recommendations for you: IKEA assembly instructions, a Saab 9000 owner's manual, the side of the Absolut bottle that you're clutching as you wistfully recall the Faulknerian prose of the Harry Potter novels. The Girl With the Dragon Tattoo is a mystery. I'll say. ×××

LONDON CALLING

Notes from a trip abroad

WE SHOULD ALL DO something completely frivolous from time to time. So my wife and I flew to London, ostensibly to see Love Never Dies, Andrew Lloyd Webber's sequel to The Phantom of the Opera. The show was years in the making, and in its opening week a blogger renamed it Paint Never Dries. It was long, visually stunning and, in my opinion, didn't contain one song you'd leave the theater humming—which would have been the true mark of a successful musical. Still, London theater is the best, audiences on their feet at the end, whistling and applauding, no one ducking out at curtain call and heading for the exits the way Bostonians do. Rude colonists, I say.

You can learn a lot abroad if you always have your eyes out on sticks. You have to be endlessly curious about people, places and things. Think of travel as a way to profit from the global economy. Years before it was discovered here, a friend overseas told me about Ryanair, the low-cost airline based in Ireland. And a client there plugged me into WPP, one of the largest advertising companies in the world, with headquarters in London. Wherever you go, ask about the businesses that the locals love. You may be able to turn that insight into pounds, euros or yuans in your pocket.

Of course, London—indeed, all of Britain and Europe—shares our economic woes. I was told that the city has more than a quarter-million road projects (read: potholes) right now. When the press talks about spending on infrastructure and creating jobs, this is what they mean. Every block, it seemed, had work crews. As I rode past, I asked my cabby about the current climate. "I came here from Egypt," he said, "to find a better life. For more money, and for healthcare for my family. I used to wait to get a doctor's appointment for a day. Now it can be weeks. Because every immigrant from the EU flocks here for doctors. There's no room for us. We don't like immigrants.... Too late to go to the U.S. for me. This is," he hesitated, "a damaged society."

I found there to be as much cynicism about politics in London as in America. More, it seemed, because I sensed a lack of hope there, as if they've lost control of events. Still, the old England of the stiff upper lip persists. As does the sardonic British humor. One day I saw a truck roll past me with large ads for a financial-management company pasted to its sides. They showed a woman's red, manicured nails caressing a man's bare chest. "Investors find our approach so seductive," it said. Try sending those trucks through Cambridge. Think a lot of folks will flock to that investment firm?

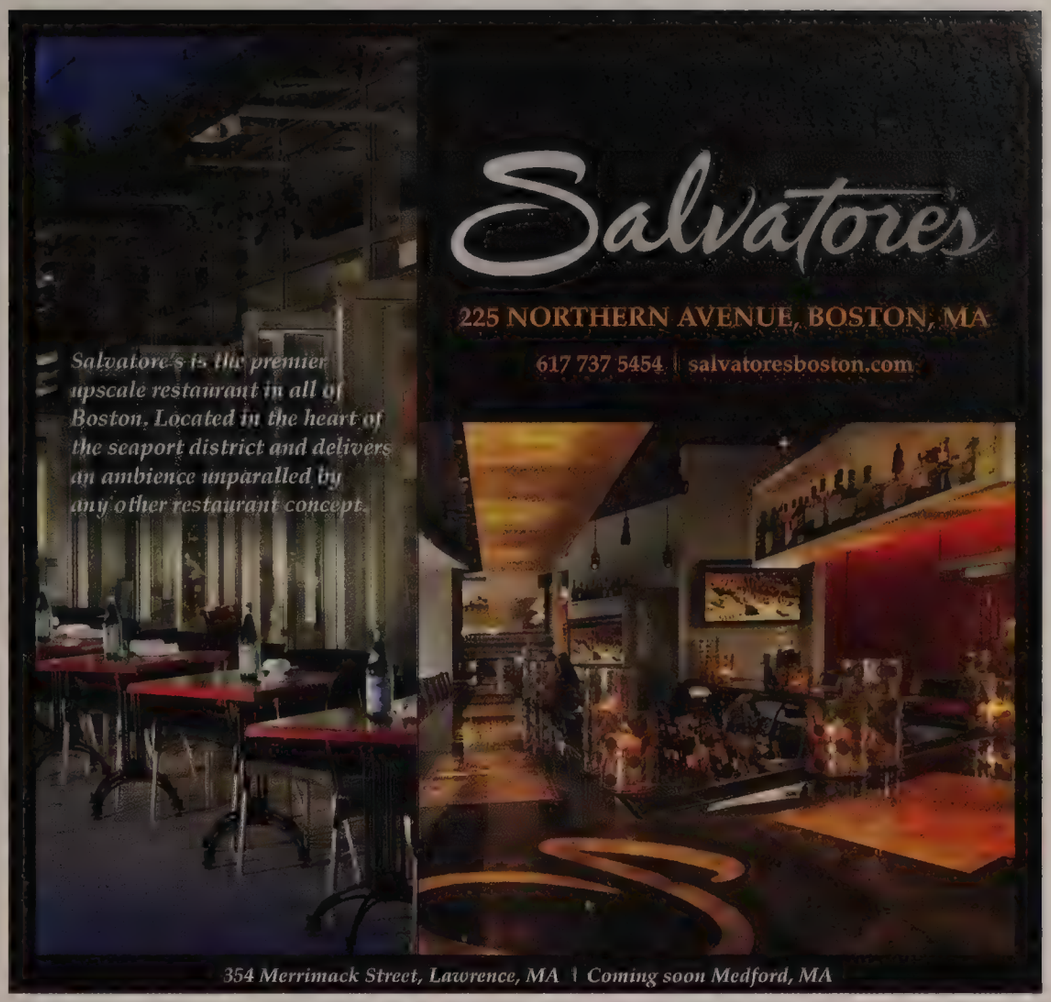
Wherever you go, ask about the businesses that the locals love.

My wife and I had dinner with an English cardiologist, also sardonic and smart. "What are the real secrets to good heart health?" I asked him. He took a sip of wine, smiled and said, "I've got the long version and the short."

"Give me both," I replied.

"The long version," the doctor answered, "is fish, sex and alcohol. The short version is attitude and a bottle of Burgundy a day."



I liked both options—and this reminder from a female executive at London's biggest retailer: "We try to be creative in difficult times here. As we all must, wherever we live. We have to change or die in business," she said, adding, "At a charity event I attended this week, they had an auction for 'business experience.' A prominent lawyer, accountant, management consultant [and] money manager were all auctioned off. You'd win an hour of time with them, and they raised thousands of pounds. People want advice."

Creativity is the law of the day. I met a young man who joined an amateur rugby team. "Great people are hooked on rugby. And if you show spirit, there are people who will hire you. I was just put into a bank-training program because of my play as a winger with the team, and an influential teammate who said, 'I like the cut of your jib.'" Jolly good, I say. Smart kid.

Another short tibdbit on the London atmosphere: A friend in financial television told me, "Everyone I know here is nervous about keeping their jobs. Media of all kinds used to be so glamorous from the outside. Now, fear rules, not fun, in the office."

More things I learned that week, overheard only at a London dinner party: "Vulcan caught Venus and Mars in bed, you know. The result was Cupid." And "Belvoir is pronounced 'beaver.'" And "Sir John Soane's Museum is delicious." "You should see the amazing play War Horse." "Dinner at Le Gavroche is spectacular. Even better if someone else pays."

And finally, "Almost impossible to get English muffins in London. But you can get bagels." ***

ON BOWDEN, JACOBY, PIERCE AND BELICHICK

5 SOX STORYLINES

Here We Go Again Last season's Celtics were built for the playoffs, it was just a matter of getting there in one piece. This year's Sox? Sounds about the same. Granted, you can't half-ass it into the baseball playoffs the way you can in the NBA, but if the Sox can sneak into the second season, they immediately become the team nobody wants to face.

DERBY DAZE Ortiz is back, back, back

Pen Pals We're about to hit August, and the Sox still need a third reliable arm in the pen. And at this point, that arm needs to be Michael Bowden's. I've seen too much of Okajima and Delcarmen to have faith there. Plus, Theo doesn't exactly have the best track record when it comes to trading for relief. Eric Gagne's World Series ring is still the second biggest travesty in baseball history. (Second only to Randy Johnson's mullet.)

Back, Back, Click While I loved watching David Ortiz win the Derby, the whole thing was bittersweet. Why? Chris Berman. It got to the point where I didn't even have time to enjoy a homer before I'm hearing "Back, back, back!," hitting an emotional wall and immediately wanting to punch something. (Preferably, Chris Berman.)

Ribbed, for His Displeasure I've never broken a rib, so I hesitate to question the legitimacy of Jacoby Ellsbury's never-ending stay on the DL... but just for a second. This is insane! How are we still here? Right now, I see only two possibilities: Either Ellsbury's a giant kitten, or there's something else going on. Something deeper, darker and far more interesting than "his ribs still hurt." I guess I prefer Door Number 2, but not by much.

Rhode Island Bound Last time we were here, I was ready to crown Daniel Nava Mr. Erin Andrews. Now, Nava's back to leaving her tickets at "will call" in Pawtucket. His was a great story, so I'm sorry to see it come to an end. But meanwhile, Daniel, have you considered Shelley Smith?

2 REALITY TV PITCHES

Outwit, Outplay, Outlast On Survivor: Fenway, we throw 25 guys onto a major league roster and watch as they spend 162 games battling foul balls, broken bones, bruised ribs and Adrian Beltre in an effort to emerge as the last one standing. (The role of Jeff Probst will be played by Johnny Pesky.)

Nate Plus Eight On this week's episode, Nate Robinson takes the kids to Disney World. Kids: "Naaate, come on! Can we go home already?" Nate: "Awww, you promised one more ride! Ima go holla at Space Mountain! Wooooordaapp!"

3 C's Offseason Threads

Just a Hunch After watching him royally poop the playoffs, it's easy to write off Jermaine O'Neal's future in Boston. It's also incorrect. The guy started 70 games last season; he still averaged 13.6 points, 6.9 rebounds and 1.4 blocks. As a fifth option, he'll be pretty damn effective. I'll have the Depends ready for the playoffs, though. Just in case.

Rivers Feels the Heat Rumors are already swirling about Doc Rivers coaching the Heat in 2011, and I already believe them. Of course, if Miami wins next season, Erik Spoelstra will keep his job, but if things go wrong—Wade gets hurt, LeBron quits, Bosh runs off to the Tree of Souls with Jake Sully—my money's on Doc taking his talents to South Beach.

Truth Serum I'm OK with Paul Pierce criticizing the C's offseason strategy—give me honesty over cliché any day. But at the same time, other than the Tony Allen deal, I don't understand why the Captain's so upset. Was he expecting LeBron? The C's weren't exactly swimming with options this summer, and Paul knows that as well as anybody.

1 ONE FARAWAY PREDICTION

Soroff On MIKE O'MALLEY

The ubiquitous TV and film actor talks about his early roles, royalty checks and the Glee phenomenon.

BEST KNOWN FOR HIS WORK ON THE LONG-RUNNING COMEDY Yes, Dear, Boston native Mike O'Malley, 43, is captivating new audiences as Kurt's dad, Burt Hummell, in the wildly popular series Glee. O'Malley won an Emmy nomination for the role, and he returns next season as a regular castmember. His other TV work includes Life With Roger and the part of crazed sports fan "The Rick" in ESPN's series of promos directed by Christopher Guest. On the big screen he's appeared in Deep Impact, Pushing Tin, 28 Days, The Perfect Man, Leatherheads, Meet Dave and the locally made On Broadway. He's also in the upcoming Julia Roberts movie Eat, Pray, Love, and in Cedar Rapids with Ed Helms and John C. Reilly. O'Malley is the artistic director of the Mineral Theater Company. He lives in Los Angeles with his wife, Lisa, and their three children.

Jonathan Soroff: Everyone's still talking about the speech you give when you demolished Finn for making a homophobic remark.
Mike O'Malley: It was a great speech, because they were saying, "We've got to change the way we think and the way we treat each other, and part of that is through language."

I smell a GLAAD award in your future.
That would be nice. What's interesting about the character is that the writers have created a guy who isn't like, "My son is gay; that's fantastic. Let's subscribe to The Advocate and go to a Broadway show!" He's much more nuanced. I just love that the adults on the show aren't just Charlie Brown parents going, "Wah wah wah."

How is it joining such a juggernaut of a show?
Any time people are watching, you count your blessings.

What are the chances one of your kids is gay?
I have a hard enough time getting them up in the morning and out of the house on time for carpool. I have a hard enough time figuring out if my wife is attracted to me, let alone what my kids' sexuality is going to be after they go through puberty.

How good is your singing voice?
This past year, at Hot Stove, Cool Music at the House of Blues in Boston, I sang "Musta Got Lost" by the J. Geils Band.

Your first gig was a one-line role on Law & Order. Do you remember what it was?
Of course, I do: "Sarge, we got a fresh one over here!"

Did you have any sense of what that show was going to become?
No. Not even close. It might've been the eighth or ninth episode. It was so early on. But that was my SAG card.

Is Christopher Guest the Monty Python of our generation?
No. He's his own thing. His humor's not broad in any way. There's a subtlety to it that's very unique. But in the sense that Monty Python influenced comedy and a ridiculous number of performers, yes. He's that influential.

So what did "The Rick" do after Game 7 of the NBA finals?
Well, "The Rick" is still living in his mother's attic, collecting useless materials that he thinks are worth a lot of money. But after Game 7, he didn't do anything. He stayed in his room for over a week. His mother put food in front of the door and knocked on it. He was devastated, and so was I.

How many Red Sox games do you have tickets for this season?
I have season tickets, but I have three little kids, so it's really hard to get back [to Boston] often enough.

How are the royalty checks from Yes, Dear*?*
Dwindling.

Who's your favorite character on Glee*?*
I love Jane Lynch, like everybody, just because her outrageousness is just so hilarious. I'm looking forward to her getting some comeuppance.

What are the best perks from being on Glee*?*
I haven't dealt with the avalanche of swag yet.

Are you learning things about parenting from being on the show?
Yes. And if I'm not learning it, I'm being reminded or made aware of the things that are coming along. When they're little, all you do is keep a watchful eye on them. But what's harder is when they're a little older, and you have to let them out into the big, bad world.

Are you just totally blown away by the kids on the show?
Yes. I'm blown away by their level of talent and their work ethic. I think any actor would be. They're working their tails off, 16, 17 hours a day, every day. When fans watch the show, they see elaborate production numbers. When an actor watches it, they're thinking, "My God! They had to learn the lines, the song, the choreography, and then they've got to do all the publicity!"

How are they handling it?
They're young, and I'm sure it's very exciting. They're the toast of the town. But they're all handling it very well, and one of the things that really amazed me is how supportive they are of one another. On Glee, the actors stay and watch the others rehearse. That's unheard of.

Do you feel parental toward them, or are they colleagues?
There's nothing I can teach them about acting. The only way I would be parental toward them is trying to constantly remind the ones I work with that this is like getting hit with lightning. What they're experiencing happens maybe twice a decade in this business. This is the first time I've been involved in something with this much acclaim.

A friend of mine said you should run for office because we need more people like Kurt's dad in charge.
Maybe I'll move back to New England and run for Senate.

Last question: Will you write a play with a part in it for me?
Yes. I'll get some scenes together and we'll go over it. I've got your phone number. ✖✖✖

SHELF LIVES

INSIDE THE OFFICES OF FIVE FAMOUS EDUCATORS

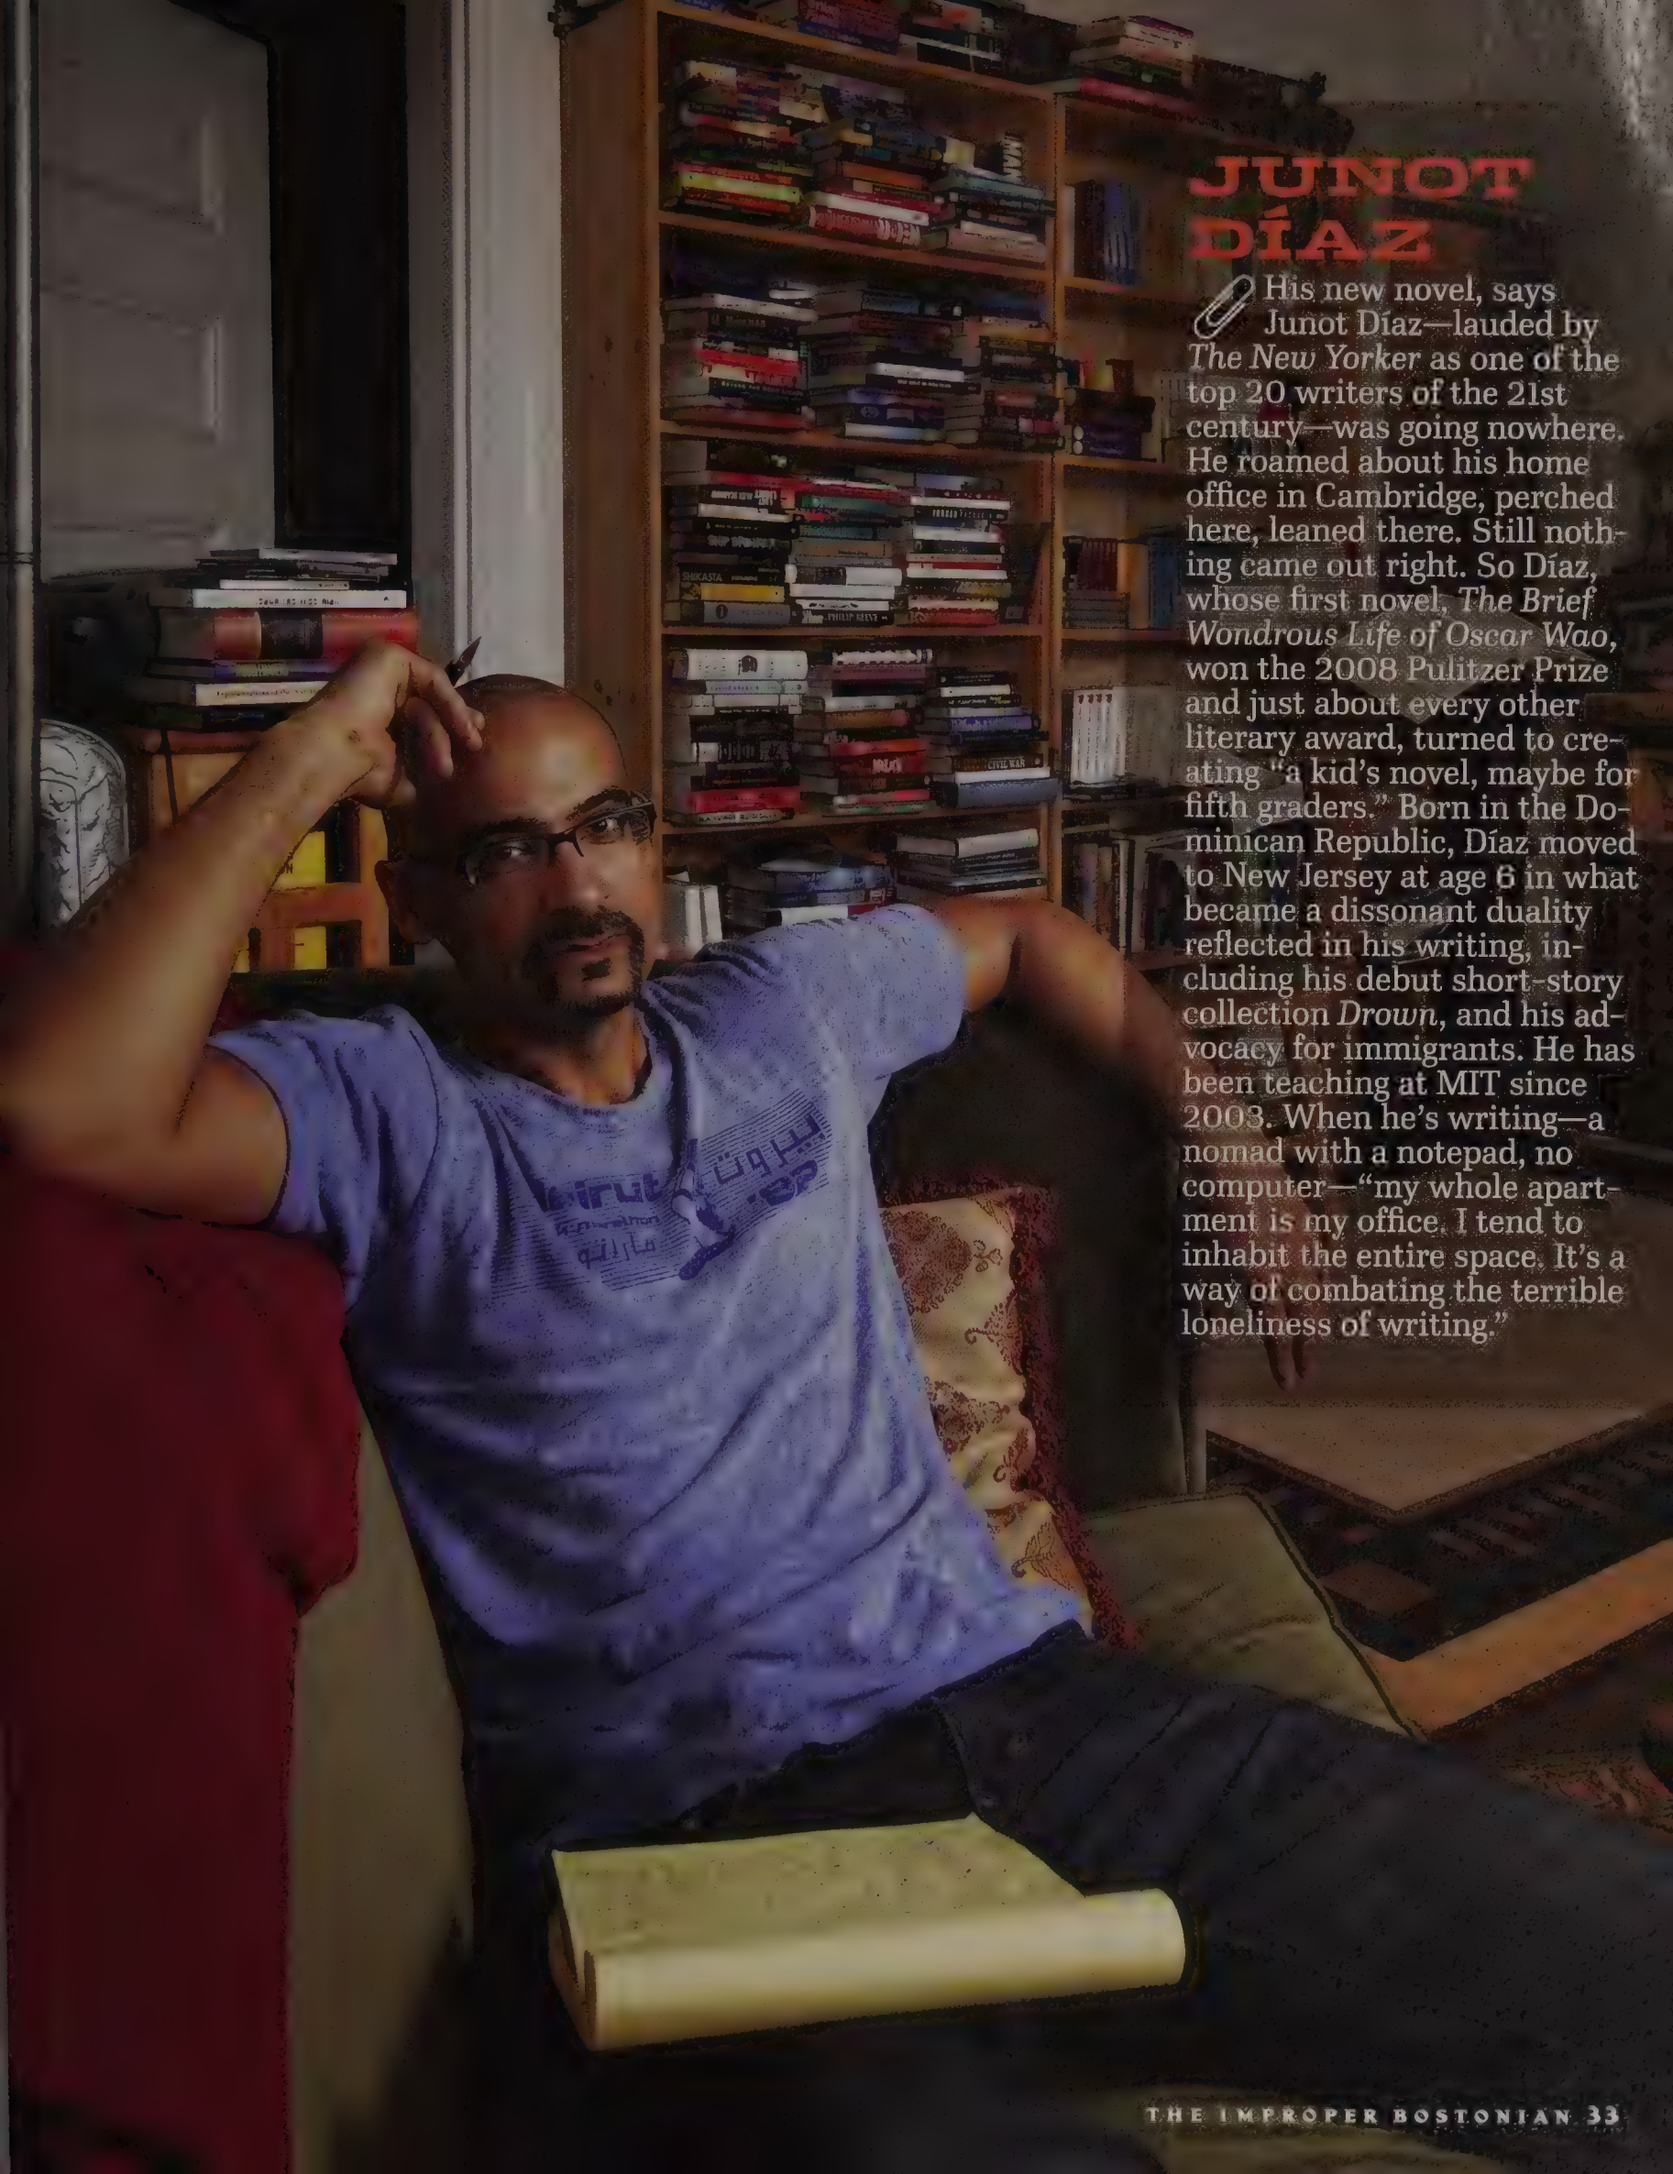
By Nancy Gaines

Just what does "genius at work" look like? Given the time and energy expended in it, your office can't help but in some way reflect you. Like a longtime couple, you begin to share attributes. So, if the work that emerges from an office is a model of excellence, what does that say of the space itself?

Here, five distinguished and distinctively creative practitioners of arts and letters let us into their habitats. And maybe even a little into their heads. Some are primarily professors who write; others are writers who also teach. Belying that inapt aphorism, "Those who can, do; those who can't, teach," they've mastered their craft in both endeavors.

Photographs by Yuri Vaysgant

Taken together, they have so many awards and honors we'd have to print an index to list them all. For now, you're invited inside some very special workplaces. See what the pictures say for themselves. →



COLIN CHANNER

In 1998, when Colin Channer, the Jamaican-born Susan and Donald Newhouse visiting professor in creative writing at Wellesley, burst on the scene with his critically acclaimed first novel, Waiting in Vain, Modern Fiction magazine placed him in the company of E.L. Doctorow and David Foster Wallace. His two novels, a novella and story collection weave profound themes around Jamaican roots, prompting the tag, "Bob Marley with a pen." Channer's now working on a project "that feels like fiction but is morphing into something else." His home office in Wellesley has totems like a Singer sewing machine to remind him that "writing is really handiwork, honest labor." There's also an Underwood typewriter and "a lot of books in my bedroom because it makes me feel, every night, when I go to sleep, that I'm in a place I have dreamed about since I was very young. Heaven is a place filled with books."

JANE KAMENSKY

One of the country's foremost historians, Jane Kamensky is the Harry S. Truman professor of American civilization and chair of the history department at Brandeis, where she has taught since 1993. Frequent on-camera expert for TV documentaries, author of three major history books and co-editor of the Oxford Handbook of the American Revolution, Kamensky teamed up with Harvard professor and New Yorker staff writer Jill Lepore to pen the 2008 best-selling novel, Blindspot, about a portrait painter and a fallen woman. Now working on a book about American artists in London in the Revolutionary era, Kamensky lives with her husband, two sons and a puppy in Cambridge. Her home office "is always terrifyingly neat. If I'm really deep in a project, there are piles of near-chaos at hand. But I never, never leave it without filing, aligning, etc. It's an island of order in a sea of pretty boisterous domesticity."

JUNOT DÍAZ

His new novel, says Junot Díaz—lauded by The New Yorker as one of the top 20 writers of the 21st century—was going nowhere. He roamed about his home office in Cambridge, perched here, leaned there. Still nothing came out right. So Díaz, whose first novel, The Brief Wondrous Life of Oscar Wao, won the 2008 Pulitzer Prize and just about every other literary award, turned to creating "a kid's novel, maybe for fifth graders." Born in the Dominican Republic, Díaz moved to New Jersey at age 6 in what became a dissonant duality reflected in his writing, including his debut short-story collection Drown, and his advocacy for immigrants. He has been teaching at MIT since 2003. When he's writing—a nomad with a notepad, no computer—"my whole apartment is my office. I tend to inhabit the entire space. It's a way of combating the terrible loneliness of writing."

ELIZABETH GOLDRING

Elizabeth Goldring's spectacular vision is all inside her head. Almost totally blind, the MIT poet/artist/inventor developed "retina prints" and a visual language that help the blind to "see" images. One of her projects is the prototype for a "color seeing machine camera"—an inexpensive, portable visual enhancement device. Goldring is a researcher and senior fellow at A.C.T. (Art/Culture/Technology), formerly MIT's Center for Advanced Visual Studies, where she's been for more than 25 years. She's currently penning her fourth book of poetry, composing an "eye journal" and working on an "eye robot" project with avant-garde dramatist Robert Wilson. Because so much of her mission relies on collaborations, Goldring said she was thrilled her office just moved from outer Mass. Ave. to the center's new quarters in the Media Lab complex at the heart of the campus. "Once again, this puts me in a good physical location near the scientists, engineers and other artists."

PAUL HARDING

After nine years teaching writing at Harvard, Paul Harding decided to take a hiatus to work on a new book when he learned (by scanning the Web) that he'd won the 2010 Pulitzer Prize for fiction for his debut novel, Tinkers. The former drummer in the '90s alt-rock trio Cold Water Flat started Tinkers a decade ago while the band was, coincidentally, on hiatus. His band made no comeback, but, clearly, breaks have helped Harding. He's using his current one to work on Enon, slated for publication in 2012 by Random House. His home office in Georgetown on the North Shore—"a lair where I crawl over books" and his two young sons crawl over him—would, ideally, "have a door. It's directly off the kitchen so there's a lot of traffic. It's a parallel process of being parent and writer."

ON A MISSION TO BECOME A MODEL CITIZEN, ONE MAN LEARNS HOW TO REVIVE AN INFANT, HOW TO DRIVE A BUS, AND WHERE TO FIND WHALES.

BY EZRA DYER * ILLUSTRATIONS BY ZACHARIAH O'HORA

KNOW-HOW THROW-DOWN

I'M A GUY WHO KNOWS HOW TO DO STUFF. I know how to use a chainsaw. I know how to dodge the endless customs line when making an international transfer at Paris-Charles De Gaulle Airport (go outside, come back in). I know how to write "boobless" on a calculator. These are all important skills.

But the value of certain talents changes with one's station in life. When I lived with roommates in Beacon Hill, it was important that I knew how to trap mice in a pizza box. When I lived in Southie with my girlfriend, it was important to know how to shovel out a car without displacing snow onto the sidewalk, street or adjacent vehicles. But now that I'm a—egad!—parent in Quincy, I require new skills. I need to glean manly, traditional dad knowledge.

First, I want to acquire a job skill that will never go out of style (unlike, um, journalism). And you know what we'll always have? Buses. Learning to drive an MBTA bus could come in handy someday. Like if I'm bellying up at the Granite Rail and someone accuses me of being a yuppie transplant liberal elitist, I can then say, "Oh yeah? Do you know how to drive a bus? Because I do." Plus I'd sort of be following in the footsteps of my own dad, who—this is true—once did a stint driving a Zamboni.

Since nothing gives you more dad cred than saving a life, I figure I'd also take an infant CPR class. That way, some day when I'm bellying up to the bar at the Hofbrau (are you seeing a trend here?), I can casually say, "Yeah, I saved a kid today. He was choking. No big deal—I wouldn't call myself a hero, but yeah, I'm sort of a hero."

Finally, is there anything more old-school New England than hunting whales? Knowing where to find the leviathans of the deep might not serve a practical purpose, but when the boy is old enough to understand how cool and awesome I am, he'll be able to brag to the other kids, "My dad knows where to find whales." And also, I'll brag about that myself when I'm bellying up to the bar at the Beachcomber with a harpoon and an eyepatch.

Time to get educated.

WARM UP THE BUS

Driving an MBTA bus is like performing heart surgery on an angry Bengal tiger during an earthquake. You've got to perform a very precise job while surrounded by complete chaos. I know this because I'm driving an articulated 60-foot bus down the street and have to dodge ambulances, oblivious pedestrians and illegally parked cars. When I try to angle toward the sidewalk to pick up a woman and her baby, I come in too sharp and blow out a tire on the curb. Fortunately, all this happens in the consequence-free world of the MBTA's Charlestown bus simulator.

I'm sitting in what looks like a bus cockpit. The switches and controls are real, but I'm surrounded by eight video screens designed to give me a 3-D driving experience. Just outside, bus instructor Ed Tighe coaches me through the simulated challenges while sim guru Billy Cameron calls up increasingly diabolical real-world situations.

We start with the basics. The most important thing you need to know about a bus is that it doesn't exactly turn on a dime. Or a quarter. Or a Spanish doubloon. I start out in a virtual 40-foot bus, your standard yellow-and-white MBTA sled. My first mission is to turn a corner, which isn't as simple as just swinging wide and ensuring you don't clip the old lady standing on the corner. Leaving too much room between the bus and the curb leads to kamikaze Boston drivers quickly occupying said space in a desperate attempt to squeeze past. "Nobody likes to be behind a bus," Ed says. "So they'll make crazy moves to try to get past." Ain't nobody passing my bus on the inside, I'll tell you that.

Since a bus pivots around its rear wheels, drivers look for the center of those wheels in their mirrors. If the center is past a given obstacle, the bus will pivot around cleanly. That is, unless there's another obstacle on the other side, because drivers have to contend with the rear end swinging out and causing mayhem, like Kim Kardashian using a hula hoop. Bus drivers must develop a sort of Luke Skywalker spatial awareness in order to navigate a 40-foot box through Boston streets without causing a public-transportation version of Sherman's March.

I complete some basic maneuvers and the simulator doesn't look like Grand Theft Auto: Boston Bus Rampage, so it's time to head outside, where the real thing awaits. I climb into the comfy Recaro seat, buckle in and fire up the motor. There's no key. I guess if you were trying to steal a bus, getting it started would be the least of your worries.

I put the beast in gear and ease out into the parking lot, Ed standing watch in the aisle. The steering wheel is nearly horizontal and roughly the diameter of one of Saturn's rings. I resist the urge to yell, "Sit down and shut up!" but it just comes natural when you're in that position.

If the driver has a heart attack, I could potentially finish his shift.

While we stay within the MBTA bus yard, this still isn't exactly a controlled environment. I navigate narrow alleys, dodge cars and try to anticipate which pedestrians might stroll right out in front of me. In other words, it's like a slow-motion version of the real world outside the gates. I'm probably looking in the mirrors as much as through the windshield, and I'm not sure how drivers manage to pay attention to what's ahead, and behind, and on the sides, while picking up passengers. It's a miracle that Boston isn't littered with the charred, crumpled remains of city buses.

But I return my iron steed unscathed. Now, if I'm ever on a bus and the driver has a heart attack, I could potentially take over. And maybe even finish his shift. If everyone would just sit down and shut up.

LITTLE PEOPLE, BIG CPR CLASS

Sometimes, my desire to acquire knowledge is motivated by the awesomeness of that knowledge itself (see: driving buses). Other times it's motivated by guilt. This is the latter. I'm not taking the Isis Parenting Infant CPR class because I want to brag about knowing infant CPR. I'm taking it so that I won't find myself one day wishing I had.

My wife, Heather, and I are in a classroom with perhaps 10 other people. A conference table is littered with creepy baby mannequins. These things make Chucky from Child's Play look like Tickle Me Elmo, and we're gonna have to get all up close and personal with them. My kid better appreciate it when I someday save his life, because it'll have required a makeout session with a plastic doll in a classroom at the Prudential Center.

First we get to know our creepy zombie children. The instructor, Jonathan, asks us to guess the weight of the mannequins. Almost uniformly, everyone guesses an amount far greater than the answer (about two pounds). "Can anyone guess why we perceive these mannequins to weigh much more than they actually do?" Jonathan asks. "Where's that weight coming from?" The question is met with silence, until one guy on the other side of the table whispers, "Responsibility." Ha. Yes. But also because, like a real baby, the head is inordinately heavy and flops around. Gotta support that noggin.

The CPR routine boils down to 30 chest compressions and two breaths. You want to keep that blood flowing. Jonathan makes sure we understand, big-picture, that we shouldn't be concerned with hurting the recipient. Infants are pretty malleable, and while an adult might get a cracked rib, hey, it's only a rib. "If someone isn't breathing," Jonathan says, "A cracked rib is the least of their worries, right?"

We also hear a lot about situational awareness. You don't want to begin CPR on someone before you pull them out of the shark tank. We watch a few videos where we're supposed to analyze a scenario and figure out the correct response. In one clip, we see a couple seconds of a baby on a towel next to a pool, with a concerned adult rushing up. Jonathan pauses the video. "Who thinks the baby was drowning in the pool?" Most hands go up. "Who thinks the baby definitely wasn't drowning?" My hand goes up. Jonathan asks why. "Because the towel wasn't wet," I reply. He says good point—but also the baby wasn't wet. I guess I was going too CSI: Miami on the problem. The moral of that clip, I think, is that babies shouldn't sunbathe by themselves next to a pool. That would be extremely bad parenting, regardless of whether CPR comes into play.

If a child is choking like LeBron James in the postseason, just turn him upside down.

Finally, we learn how to handle choking. We turn our mannequins face down and clap them on the back. Again, big picture: Gravity is your friend. If a child is choking like LeBron James in the postseason, just turn him upside down and give a healthy clap on the back. That food will want to shoot right out. And you can stand up, take a bow and accept the gracious applause that's constantly rained upon Us Who Know How to Do Stuff.

HERE, WHALEY-WHALEY

You can't be a well-rounded Quincy resident without knowing how to find whales. This is a fact I just made up. In years past, New Englanders were so good at finding whales that they almost found every last one of them. Now there are more whales, and you don't have to go to the South Pacific and get scurvy to see them. But it's not like they're just hanging out, frolicking in front of the Ocean Club. You have to go find them, and I want to know where.

So I hook up with the New England Aquarium's whale-watch outfit. Its boat, Voyager III, was specifically designed for whale watches. It's a 113-foot catamaran with lots of open space outside on wraparound decks. And there's a bar, for when the whale-watching is slow.

I set out on an afternoon trip with captain Deb Ridings and a boatful of hopeful cetacean enthusiasts. We steam for the Stellwagen Bank, an 842-square-mile swath of ocean that begins about 20–25 miles offshore. At Stellwagen, the water suddenly gets shallow, and the currents blasting up from the bottom make the place a fish party and a whale playground.

My mission is to learn about marine life, but I can't help geeking out on the boat itself. We're talking four 1,000-horsepower twin-turbo diesel V12s running through jet drives—no propellers to filet the whales. The whole deal is controlled by a small box that Ridings carries around on a strap. It's got a dial, like an old-school boom-box volume-control knob, which acts as a steering wheel. Two small levers work the throttles. It's a pretty simple contraption for a vessel the size of a house that can fling itself along at 30 knots. Of course, I'm sure that keeping the Voyager on course is harder than it looks. But I think that if the entire crew were busy fighting pirates, I could probably take the helm and steer us to safety. But if I had to dock at the Aquarium, the boat would probably end up somewhere in the vicinity of Quincy Market, à la Speed 2: Cruise Control.

A naturalist, Jeff, rocks the mike to tell passengers what we're looking for. Off-air, I bombard him with questions. Contrary to popular belief (OK, maybe just my ill-informed belief), the boat doesn't use sonar to find whales. In other words, they don't fire up their fishfinder and look for the Moby Dick icon to appear on-screen. They just cruise around Stellwagen with their eyes peeled. There are two to three trips a day, and the later trips often benefit from the earlier ones—if you see whales in the morning, you go look around that area in the afternoon. The whales can only swim so far. Another trick: If you want to find whales, look for the whale-watch boats. When we see a cluster of boats on the horizon, the whales appear soon thereafter.

But Deb knows how to sniff out whales. Literally. "Did you smell that?" she asks. "Whale breath." I ask what whale breath smells like. "You'll know when you smell it," she replies. "Bear in mind, they eat fish." Yes they do. A humpback surfaces next to the boat, and a moment later I'm hit with a raunchy blast of whale-itosis. As whale-finding techniques go, I prefer searching for visual cues.

Either way, I now know where the wild things are. And I could drive a bus to the dock, take you out on a boat, and save your ass when a whale surprises you so much that you choke on your lunch. If they gave continuing-education credits for general awesomeness, I'd be thoroughly up to date.

With my brain nearly full, there's only one more thing to learn. On the return trip to shore, I ascertain that the beers at the Voyager III bar are, in fact, quite cold. Good to know. ✖✖✖

BEFORE TASTE, before creativity, a chef's most elementary skill is how to slice a tomato. The A-Team ★ ½ Stupid even by the low standards one must apply to an adaptation of a TV show starring Mr. T, Smokin' Aces director Joe Carnahan's noisy, loutish shoot-'em-up aims to please but merely grates. Slumming Liam Neeson waves a phallic cigar around as the leader of a cocky, covert ops team spending so much time laughing at their own jokes and high-fiving, it's unclear how they get anything else done. You'll want to slap the toothpick out of Bradley Cooper's smarmy smirk. District 9's Sharlto Copley hams it up incessantly as crazy pilot Murdock, and some idiot in casting had the bright idea to let Ultimate Fighter Quinton "Rampage" Jackson quote Gandhi. The action is poorly staged and impossible to follow, and everybody's having such a grand old time that nothing ever feels like it's at stake. The end result is a smug frat party with explosions. (In the suburbs.)

Exit Through the Gift Shop ★★★★ This remarkable, hilarious documentary from the secretive British street artist known only as Banksy begins as a slightly tedious story of an underground movement. Eccentric tagalong dilettante Thierry Guetta spent years chronicling the creation of spray-paint stencils that appeared on public walls from artists like Shepard Fairey and Banksy himself. But just when you think you've settled in for a routine hipster hagiography, Exit Through the Gift Shop implodes in spectacular fashion, as Banksy seizes control of the project from the incompetent director, and Guetta responds by setting the fickle art world on its ear with a million-dollar triumph of hype over substance. (This is the Adaptation of art documentaries.) Many are wondering if this is all a hoax, but if Exit Through the Gift Shop's droll, insistent provocations leave you asking questions about the thin line between artistic accomplishment and media manipulation, then it only rings more true. (In the suburbs.)

Get Him to the Greek ★★ Appearances to the contrary, Nicholas Stoller's follow-up to Forgetting Sarah Marshall is not technically a sequel. For starters, Jonah Hill plays a different character this time around, but the biggest departure is one of tone. You won't find the previous picture's gentle, inclusive spirit on display here. Get Him to the Greek is defiantly unpleasant, aggressive and gross. Sometimes it's amusing, but an icky aftertaste lingers. Hill stars as a schlubby, put-upon record company staffer who spends his days absorbing insults from his tyrannical boss (a monstrously funny Diddy) until assigned to babysit his debauched rock 'n' roll idol Aldous Snow (Russell Brand) on a road trip from London to L.A. What follows is a ramshackle collection of increasingly outré set-pieces involving booze, vomit, narcotics and ladies of questionable moral standards. Most scenes seem to feature some object or another being shoved into Hill's rectum, proving once again that anal penetration is comedy's new kick in the balls. (At Somerville Theatre and in the suburbs.)

The Girl Who Played With Fire ★★ This spring's surprise art-house smash The Girl with the Dragon Tattoo didn't do much for me, but I can understand its appeal. Based on the first book of Swede Stieg Larsson's best-selling trilogy, the film spiced up hoary CBS procedural tropes with dashes of tawdry transgression and chic exoticism. It was like an episode of Cold Case, but with subtitles, facial piercings and rape. The Girl Who Played With Fire, alas, is one of those sad sequels that removes everything anyone might've enjoyed in the original. Noomi Rapace's iconic damaged hacker Lisbeth Salander is framed for murder, and only her beloved, beleaguered journalist Mikael Blomkvist believes she's innocent. Cripplingly, the film commits the Jewel of the Nile sequel sin of keeping the two characters we came to see apart for the entire running time. Meager as Dragon Tattoo's pleasures were, the two leads worked well together. This time, not a single word is exchanged between them. Occasional e-mails just don't cut it, chemistry-wise. (At Kendall Square and West Newton.)

Grown Ups ★ Last year Adam Sandler gave the bravest, most revealing performance of his career, as a troubled, deeply unlikable comedian in Judd Apatow's underrated Funny People. As happens whenever Sandler ventures outside his comfort zone (Punch-Drunk Love, Spanglish) the audience recoiled, and now we must suffer another lazy retreat back to formula crap. The maudlin, sloppy and shockingly unfunny Grown Ups teams Sandler with pals Kevin James, Chris Rock, David Spade and Rob Schneider as childhood buddies reuniting for a weekend at a New England lake house. There's a screenplay

CHECK, PLEASE

Jay Roach's latest comedy is ultimately unsatisfying.

Dinner for Schmucks ★★
Starring Steve Carell, Paul Rudd, Stephanie Szostak, Jemaine Clement, Zach Galifianakis and Bruce Greenwood. Screenplay by David Guion and Michael Handelman. Based on the play by Francis Veber. Directed by Jay Roach. At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.

TAKE A MOMENT AND ASK yourself, have wacky hair and false teeth ever made a performer more amusing, or are they just the affectations of actors trying too hard?

I'm already quite certain that Concord's own Steve Carell is extremely funny. There's probably no other actor who could've played The 40-Year-Old Virgin, and even though The Office ran out of storylines more than a year ago, his Michael Scott remains an extraordinary creation. (Heck, Carell even had his moments in this spring's Date Night, and that movie was terrible.) He has a way with defiant obliviousness, finding a stubborn nobility in denying his cringe-worthy failures.

Of all the comedians working in film right now, Carell is the last one who needs a goofy Caesar-cut of badly dyed henna-hair, nerd glasses and prosthetic buck teeth. But so it goes with Dinner for Schmucks, a vulgarized, overwrought riff on French writer/director Francis Veber's stage and screen smash, The Dinner Game. If you need a precise summation of the differences in approach between the original and the American remake, just consider the title change.

Paul Rudd stars as Tim Wagner, an up-and-coming financial analyst who, after impressing his haughty boss (Bruce Greenwood, oozing sleaze), is invited to a dinner party with the executive class. The only catch is, he's required to bring an idiot that all these rich jerks can mock during the meal. Initially repulsed, the opportunistic Wagner suddenly sees a promotion in his future after accidentally hitting Steve Carell's loudmouth grotesque with his car.

A lonely, cuckolded taxidermist who makes elaborate dioramas out of dead mice, Carell's Barry is an aching plea for attention in a Members Only jacket. This character doesn't seem to come from anywhere near the planet Earth, and director Jay Roach has encouraged the actor to push his sniveling affectations so far over the top that his ridiculous hair and teeth are more than gilding the lily.

If you need a precise summation of the differences in approach between the original and the remake, just consider the title.

Roach is an erratic director on his best day. He's helmed a couple of very special comedies (the original Austin Powers, Meet the Parents) as well as some of the most joyless, desultory spectacles of recent years (the Austin Powers sequels, Meet the Fockers). The mice gag is already exhausted during the opening credits, but in Dinner for Schmucks there is no dead horse that cannot be beaten.

Paul Rudd could be the next Jack Lemmon if given the right role, but you'd never be able to tell from this film. Stuck playing the Ben Stiller role as an increasingly embarrassed yuppie jerkwad, he just sits on the sidelines and cringes while Carell accidentally ruins his life by stumbling through contrived encounters with his clingy ex-girlfriend (towering comedienne Lucy Punch) and a horny, egotistical artist played by Flight of the Conchord's Jemaine Clement.

Poor newcomer Stephanie Szostzak is stranded as Rudd's wet blanket fiancée, as she's required to deliver the movie's thankless lectures on morality while lacking the acting chops to deliver a simple sentence. Lovely girl, but she sounds like a drunken baby.

Every performance is hideously overscaled, and Roach's unfortunate tendency to keep the camera within six inches of everyone's face underlines the performers' strain. There's a pleading quality to Dinner for Schmucks that's the antithesis of funny, because watching talented people overreach in cramped, pore-exposing close-ups inspires more pity than giggles.

Dinner for Schmucks scores a couple of laughs in its late stretches, eventually including the title scene that Veber's original never got around to. A free-for-all freakshow, it's undeniably fun to watch smarmy financial honchos collapse under pressure.

Alas, the sequence is also notable for neutering comic genius Zach Galifianakis with a silly costume. First Carell has false teeth, and now Galifianakis is wearing a cape? Why is Roach so hell-bent on turning such talented people into prop comics? ✖✖✖ credited to Sandler and Fred Wolf, but it feels more like a collection of pious speeches about old-fashioned family values recited over sappy music cues, while former Saturday Night Live cast members halfheartedly ad-lib and try not to obscure the product placement. The comic's Happy Madison company has produced some slapdash features in the past, but particularly in light of Funny People's brilliance, Grown Ups feels like their lamest effort to date. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

How to Train Your Dragon ★★★ This is an unusually adorable CGI adventure from DreamWorks Animation, best known for the noxious Shrek series. Jay Baruchel voices a stumblebum Viking named Hiccup who aches to befriend dragons instead of slay them. Much to the chagrin of his Hagar the Horrible–looking dad (Gerard Butler, in his first tolerable movie), our young hero spends the bulk of the film cozying up to a moody creature nicknamed Toothless and teaching kids a valuable lesson about kindness conquering aggression. The story is a familiar one, with echoes of Avatar during the vertiginous 3-D flying sequences. But the movie is disarmingly sweet and strikingly well-crafted. Directors Dean DeBlois and Chris Sanders were responsible for Disney's charming 2002 oddity Lilo & Stitch. This one doesn't feel quite as fresh, but it gets the job done with rousing action sequences and a great orchestral score by John Powell. (In the suburbs.)

Inception ★★★ ½ Ever since his art-house smash Memento, writer/director Christopher Nolan has been obsessed with smashing up the syntax of conventional thrillers. Inception is the kind of pet project that could only happen in the wake of The Dark Knight, as Nolan scored a couple hundred million dollars by helming one of the biggest blockbusters of all time. Inception is an expansive, expensive brain-bender rooted in genre satisfactions; half Solaris, half The Matrix. Leonardo DiCaprio stars as a sullen corporate espionage agent slinking around Kyoto stealing valuable information by infiltrating people's dreams. Cleverly layered, the movie jumbles four separate realities into continuous sequences, as action scenes happen simultaneously across different dimensions but with the same characters. It's a huge movie full of meaty ideas, even when the backbreaking ambition begins to feel like a grind. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Iron Man 2 ★★ ½ This overstuffed and underdeveloped sequel to 2008's smash juggles at least four separate plot-lines, which wastes enormous amounts of our time piling on new characters and setting up so many potential sequels and spin-offs, the movie has no chance to tell a coherent story of its own. But personality goes a long way, and while still a colossal disappointment, Iron Man 2 at least offers the small pleasures of a ridiculously overqualified cast riffing off one another, whenever their clunky CGI suits aren't getting in the way. With the movie in his back pockets, a swaggering Robert Downey Jr. once again stars as drunken, narcissistic playboy Tony Stark. He's got some delightful screwball banter with Gwyneth Paltrow and a worthy nemesis in steely-eyed, monosyllabic Mickey Rourke. Sam Rockwell and Garry Shandling bring on superlative smarm, but this time around director Jon Favreau lets sequel-itis and thudding heavy metal drown out the zingers. (In the suburbs.)

Garden Variety

Vegging Out As part of its Green Screens series, the Coolidge presents Ingredients, a feature-length documentary about the American food crisis and its effect on our environment. Take a look at various farms throughout the country, and see how consumers and chefs like Alice Waters, Peter Hoffman and Greg Higgins are supporting local farmers. Go back to your roots on July 29.

The Kids Are All Right ★★★ ½ Simply delightful. Director/cowriter Lisa Cholodenko's family farce stars Annette Bening and Julianne Moore as lesbian helicopter moms flummoxed by their kids' latching on to their hapless, sperm donor dad. Played with no shortage of comic brilliance by Mark Ruffalo, he's a bare-chested, groovy organic farmer with a hankering for instant gratification and a penchant for phrases like, "Right on." Complications ensue. Gently ribbing certain Whole Foods lifestyle choices that'll be familiar to anybody from California or Cambridge, The Kids Are All Right has a warm, randy spirit, which embraces these characters not in spite of, but because of their imperfections. Moore, in particular, hasn't been allowed to cut loose like this in eons. She's a lost New Age girl trying to get her groove back, while Bening's tightly wound wine aficionado scores all the haymaker put-downs. Cholodenko's last film was 2002's wonderful Laurel Canyon, and Kids hits the same raunchy comedic heights. In Cholodenko's world, middle age is a funny and sexy place to be. (At Kendall Square, Coolidge Corner and West Newton Cinema.)

Knight and Day ★★ Tom Cruise had a great run. For 20 years he reigned as America's top superstar. But then one day he fired his publicist, jumped on Oprah's couch and revealed himself as an insane cult leader who alienated his fanbase to the point where even my mom doesn't like Jerry Maguire anymore. Now comes Knight and Day, which stars Cruise as some sort of rogue superspy who falls into bedlam with Cameron Diaz's ditzy blonde civilian, and allegedly hilarious hijinks ensue. The gag here is that Cruise could either be a CIA agent out to save the world, or he could be a deranged madman. What's a girl like Diaz to do when the gun-toting assassin keeps leading her into shootouts at badly photographed Boston locations, all while manically assuring her "I'm handling this"? They're chasing some sort of super-battery, but that doesn't really matter. The real pursuit here is two faded stars working overtime for your affection, just begging you to love them again. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

The Last Airbender ★ How many more chances are we going to give M. Night Shyamalan? For a while, I liked to think of him as a skilled director stuck working for a terrible writer. Alas, the fact that he's self-employed makes it a tough relationship to change. And now I can't even tell you what The Last Airbender is even supposed to be about. Based on an allegedly popular Nickelodeon cartoon, the movie left me baffled during the opening expository crawl. A bunch of kids babble mumbo jumbo with all the commitment of a school play and strike tai-chi poses in front of bad special effects. Working on his first blockbuster gig-for-hire, Shyamalan's authorial signature shines through in the film's commitment to solemn humorlessness and a bizarre decision to shoot entire action sequences within cramped single takes. I avoided the controversial (and reportedly unwatchable) 3-D conversion yet was still shocked at what a drab and ugly film this is, even without it being dimmed by those annoying glasses. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Please Give ★★★ ½ Miles from the rancid, materialist chick-flicks that dominate the marketplace right now, writer/director Nicole Holofcener's films tend to favor behavior over plot. They work their way toward tiny epiphanies that feel grounded and true-to-life. Nothing much happens, but everything changes. Please Give is Holofcener's strongest picture since her offhandedly-brilliant debut Walking and Talking and stars Catherine Keener in a role that shouldn't be remotely sympathetic. Except Keener is one of the great actresses of our time and is able to convey untold vulnerability even while saying exactly the wrong thing at the worst possible moment. As a liberal, guilt-ridden Manhattan antiques dealer making a fortune on dead people's furniture, Keener is a flurry of rationalizations, overcompensations and random crying spells. Her desperate attempts at volunteer work come to hilarious, sometimes poignantly disastrous ends, as she slowly learns the difference between "compassion" and "pity." It's a deeply unflattering role, yet Keener is never less than captivating. (At Waltham Embassy.)

Robin Hood ★★ Maybe the Kevin Costner version wasn't so bad after all? Ridley Scott's mega-budget prequel is a dreary slog through the aftermath of King Richard's crusade and has almost nothing to do with the tale upon which it's purportedly based. This is a glum saga where everyone acts sad, powerless and smelly between the pseudo-Braveheart skirmishes Scott tends to fall back on these days. And you can count on one hand the number of times Robin Hood fires his trademark bow and arrow. He's just another sad-sack with a sword caught up in historical intrigue, as if Scott decided to secretly make a sequel to his lousy Crusades epic Kingdom of Heaven and weasel it into production by calling it Robin Hood. (In the suburbs.)

Sex and the City 2 ★ "Shoes, money, outfits, shoes, vagina, money, shoes, jewelry, outfits, money, shoes." That's pretty much all I got out of this two-and-a-half-hour barrage of fetishized luxury items, crass behavior and materialism sadly misconstrued as female empowerment. After the redundant, happily-ever-after endings of both the TV program and the first movie, there's no reason for this sequel to exist besides money. So I guess it's fitting that Sex and the City 2 is about how ridiculously freaking rich these people are. Instead of a story, we watch the gals vacationing at a $22,000-a-night Abu Dhabi resort. Little occurs besides costume changes, and the movie periodically stops dead in its tracks for lengthy itemizations of the products on display. It's a cartoon Middle East, where women wear the latest haute couture beneath their burkas and mean, old religious dudes get huffy over Carrie and her entourage tramping around their city with their aging, leathery cleavage hanging out. The worldview is toxic and the excess so wretched that this feels like a Transformers movie for greedy, middle-aged slatterns. (In the suburbs.)

Shrek Forever After ★ ½ I can't believe I've sat through four Shrek movies. The things I do for you people! With its bare-bones animation—the empty backgrounds bearing the distinct stink of a direct-to-DVD sequel—this latest desultory slog attempts to reboot the series by positing an It's a Wonderful Life scenario. Mike Myers' charmless ogre gets fed up with all the burping, farting and pooping by his babies and longs for the more solitary existence of his old, undomesticated life. Dastardly Rumpelstiltskin (voiced by in-house animator Walt Dohrn, allowing you to hear cost-cutting measures in full effect) shows the titular ogre what life would be like were he never born, sending him off to wander around a blighted, dystopian Far Far Away. Shrek has to meet everybody all over again, an implicit acknowledgment that there's nowhere else to go with these characters except to start the entire series over from scratch. (In the suburbs.)

Solitary Man ★★★ Leading with his swagger and dimpled chin, Michael Douglas carries himself like Hollywood royalty, yet always carefully signals chasms of inadequacy lurking just beneath the posturing. It's hard to think of another leading man who so convincingly gravitates toward human frailty, his characters constantly undone by lust, greed or threatened-white-guy privilege. Douglas is a much braver—and much better—actor than he tends to get credit for. Sadly, we haven't seen much of him over the past decade, save for bit parts in crap comedies. But there are always indies, and Solitary Man (directed by Brian Koppelman and David Levien) has been too-neatly designed as the Ultimate Michael Douglas Experience. Culling together echoes of the star's most iconic roles, it's a somewhat contrived, if ultimately irresistible, one-man show of arrogance, entitlement and aching vulnerability. Douglas stars as a once-prosperous New Jersey auto-dealership mogul who seems to have dedicated the past six years of his life to self-destructing in the tawdriest way imaginable. The movie wouldn't make sense with anybody else in the part. (At West Newton Cinema, and in the suburbs.)

Toy Story 3 ★★★★ So this year's summer blockbuster for adults turns out to be a contemplation of mortality and obsolescence starring a bunch of animated plastic toys. You might reasonably wonder if we critics ever get bored writing love letters to Pixar, especially when it comes to a long-delayed sequel that on the surface appears to be geared toward audience familiarity and 3-D price-gouging gimmicks. Yet these sons of bitches have done it again. Tom Hanks' cowboy Woody and Tim Allen's career-redeeming Buzz Lightyear find themselves put out to pasture once young Andy heads off to college. They're confined to a shabby daycare center that carries eerie echoes of senior-citizen homes across the land. What follows is a rousing jailbreak adventure with a tragic undertow, tackling serious questions of death and abandonment in a mature manner that would make Ingmar Bergman proud, if only he'd played with dolls. This is a treasure. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

The Twilight Saga: Eclipse ★★ Probably as good as any movie based on a Stephenie Meyer novel can be, Eclipse continues the mopey saga of sparkly vampires, shirtless werewolves and a heroine so vapid that in terms of toxic female characterizations she makes Carrie Bradshaw seem generous and self-aware. The new addition here is directorial competence, something the first two features sorely lacked. Filmmaker David Slade previously helmed the pedophile's nightmare Hard Candy and a very different vampire picture called 30 Days of Night. Also, stuff actually happens this time. There's a rascally pack of newborn vampires tearing up the Pacific Northwest, and the film picks up steam when it strays from the Hot Topic teen angst and charts an uneasy alliance between the vampires and werewolves against their common enemies. Slade's got visual chops to burn and shoots Robert Pattinson's fey dreamboat Edward and Kristen Stewart's petulant twit Bella in romanticized, wide-screen close-ups. But in the end it's still a Twilight movie, which means queasy sexual politics, rancid dialogue and terrible lead performances. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

PSYCH-OUT

MGMT stretches beyond its electro-pop breakthrough with spacey ambitions.

MGMT plays Bank of America Pavilion Aug. 10.

HIT SINGLES CAN PROVE a mixed blessing for a new band. Consider MGMT, whose 2008 debut Oracular Spectacular became an electro-pop monster thanks to "Kids" and "Time to Pretend," beat-baked tunes iced with Ben Goldwasser's catchy-doodle-synth lines.

The group revved up massive crowds from Glastonbury to Bonnaroo and opened for Paul McCartney at Fenway Park—an ironic twist given that "Time to Pretend" poked fun at rock-star excess. And when Phish narrowed a list of classic albums to perform as a "musical costume" last Halloween, Oracular Spectacular made the final eight, the most recent contender since Radiohead's Kid A.

But there was a hitch. MGMT's hits weren't truly representative of that CD—or of Goldwasser and Andrew VanWyngarden, who started the group as a duo while tripping through college at Wesleyan.

"The bigger songs were the result of messing around with computers and sampling that we weren't that familiar with," says Goldwasser, 27. "We didn't listen to electronic music at all."

Instead, they were steeped in psychedelic music from the '60s and '70s as well as underground post-punk. And when they added three bandmates to tour behind Oracular Spectacular, space-rock ambitions took flight, leading to MGMT's new CD Congratulations.

The synthetic confections that had put MGMT on the map were supplanted by dreamy experimentations more akin to Hawkwind, T. Rex and the early days of Pink Floyd and the Grateful Dead. And the band's casual fans responded with more confusion than kudos.

"Maybe we chose a harder path, but I think in the end, it will work out better for us," Goldwasser says from a San Diego tour stop. "It's easy for someone to say, 'If only they'd made anything that sounded like "Kids" and put it on this album.' At the same time, if we'd written a shittier version of 'Kids,' would that have helped our career and made people like it more?"

Coproduced by Peter "Sonic Boom" Kember from Spacemen 3, Congratulations still has its accessible slices, including two upbeat shoutouts to other influences: "Song for Dan Treacy" (leader of the English band Television Personalities) and the gloriously shambolic romp "Brian Eno," for the ex-Roxy Music sound painter and producer for Talking Heads and U2. "He fit a lot of things into his music that you would never think would go together," Goldwasser says, "and he makes it work."

In turn, "Flash Delirium" casually splices heavenly harmonies, a halted flute solo and closing hardcore rush. And the pastoral suite "Siberian Breaks" morphs in style and volume. "People say it's some sort of super-experimental prog-rock," he says. "It's not that weird. It uses a lot of conventional pop-song ideas. We just think it's a pretty song and it happens to be 12 minutes long."

The new material also made a surprisingly easy transition to the stage, compared to songs from Oracular Spectacular. "We recorded the first album just me and Andrew," the keyboardist says, "and had to figure out how to perform songs that we never intended to play with a five-piece band." This time, he and singer/guitarist VanWyngarden developed the songs in the studio with guitarist James Richardson, bassist Matt Asti and drummer Will Berman.

Goldwasser says he particularly enjoys playing the CD's surf-inspired opener "It's Working" live. "It's pretty hard to play all those parts and sing four-part harmony at the same time," he says. "It took a while to feel more confident."

The same goes for MGMT's concerts overall. "We've been playing really well lately," says Goldwasser, whose group hits Bank of America Pavilion Aug. 10 and Holyoke's Mountain Park the next night. "It's not so much of a spectacular stage show or anything like that. But we do have some cool visual projections going on. And in general, if people come to our show looking for a real mind-blowing psychedelic experience, hopefully they'll get it."

As long as they're not expecting an electro-pop party. ✖✖✖

Sleepless Hit

Night Owl Insomnia initially led Adam Young to experiment with a borrowed condenser and analog mixer in his parents' basement. Three and a half years later, his sleepless musical experiment took flight with "Fireflies," the first of Owl City's catchy synth-pop hit singles that earned the one-man band a summer touring spot opening for Maroon 5. See Owl City perform tracks from his latest album An Airplane Carried Me to Bed, consisting of 11 songs from his basement retreat, at Bank of America Pavilion on Aug. 9.

Star Search

Carl Hiaasen's latest Floridian comedy arrives just in time for beach season. In Star Island, a slimy paparazzo mistakenly kidnaps a drug-addled pop singer's "stunt double," launching the reader on a wild spin through Miami's celebrity demimonde. Frightening stage mothers, plastic publicists, oversexed producers—the tropes abound. There's even a kooky ex-governor living in a mangrove swamp. Hiaasen reads from this latest candyfloss yarn on Aug. 2 at the Brattle Theatre.

KIDS ARE ALL RIGHT

Support You Can Count On

If I had a Children's Action Corp, I'd make them dress up in cute uniforms and sing to me, like the von Trapps, and maybe even massage my feet. But apparently Robert F. Kennedy had other ideas in mind.

At Embracing the Legacy, the annual fund-raiser held at the John F. Kennedy Library, the organization chose to honor such passionate advocates for youth services as mega-philanthropists Steve and Joan Belkin, the right Hon. James T. Brett (of the do-gooding Bretts) and Teach for America founder Wendy Kopp.

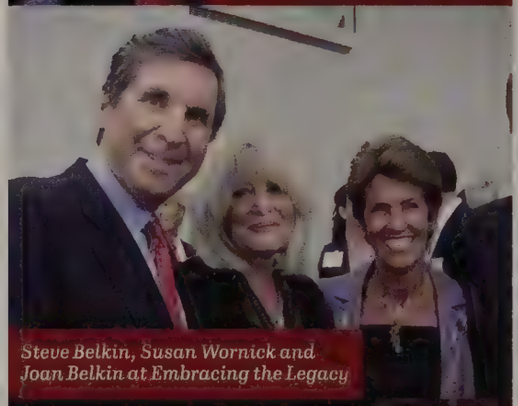
On hand to fete them (and schmooze amongst themselves) were red-headed scion Joe Kennedy III and the breathtakingly lovely Lauren Birchfield, brunette babe Amy Belkin (looking stunning in a dress that BFF fashionista Harley Bilzerian found for her), Red Sox owner John Henry and his stunning bride Linda Pizzutti, gazillionaire Democratic operative Chris Gabrieli, the comme il faut Nancy Belsky and her other half, Mark, Wellesley's most social couple, Lynne and Gary Smith, and others of comparable wattage.

The VIP reception was followed by cocktails, which ended with waiters and waitresses performing the thankless task of trying to herd everyone into dinner so the bestowing of awards could begin.

Overheard by the bar:

One man greeted a female friend by saying, "You look fabulous," to which she responded: "Thanks. You know, at my age, it's all about the bra."

Auto Eroticism



Light-years away from your typically stuffy fund-raiser, the Lupus Foundation of New England hosted a happening cocktail party at the Larz Anderson Auto Museum, and even more refreshing, it wasn't all the usual suspects.

Against the backdrop of all those classic cars, there was classic jazz (courtesy of Al Copley, who flew in from Europe just to be there), classic food (courtesy of Fireplace owner Jim Solomon, who schlepped all the way from the other side of Brookline to be there) and classic cocktails (courtesy of a bartender who deserved a medal).

Board chair Pat Fraser was there, looking lovely, with her husband (and self-described "appendage") Edgar Milford, as were aptly named fashion plate Jewel Ford, vivacious editor Sheila Horowitz, maraschino cherry fan Joanna Haas, Rulala babes Maura Howley and Rachel Solomon (Jim's wife), the beyond gorgeous Jenna Jarosz, whose mother, Beverly, is the foundation's development director, and one woman who said, "I had an international marriage. I'm not really sure whether or not I'm divorced."

Paul Epstein at Fashionably Late

Alexandra Hall at Fashionably Late

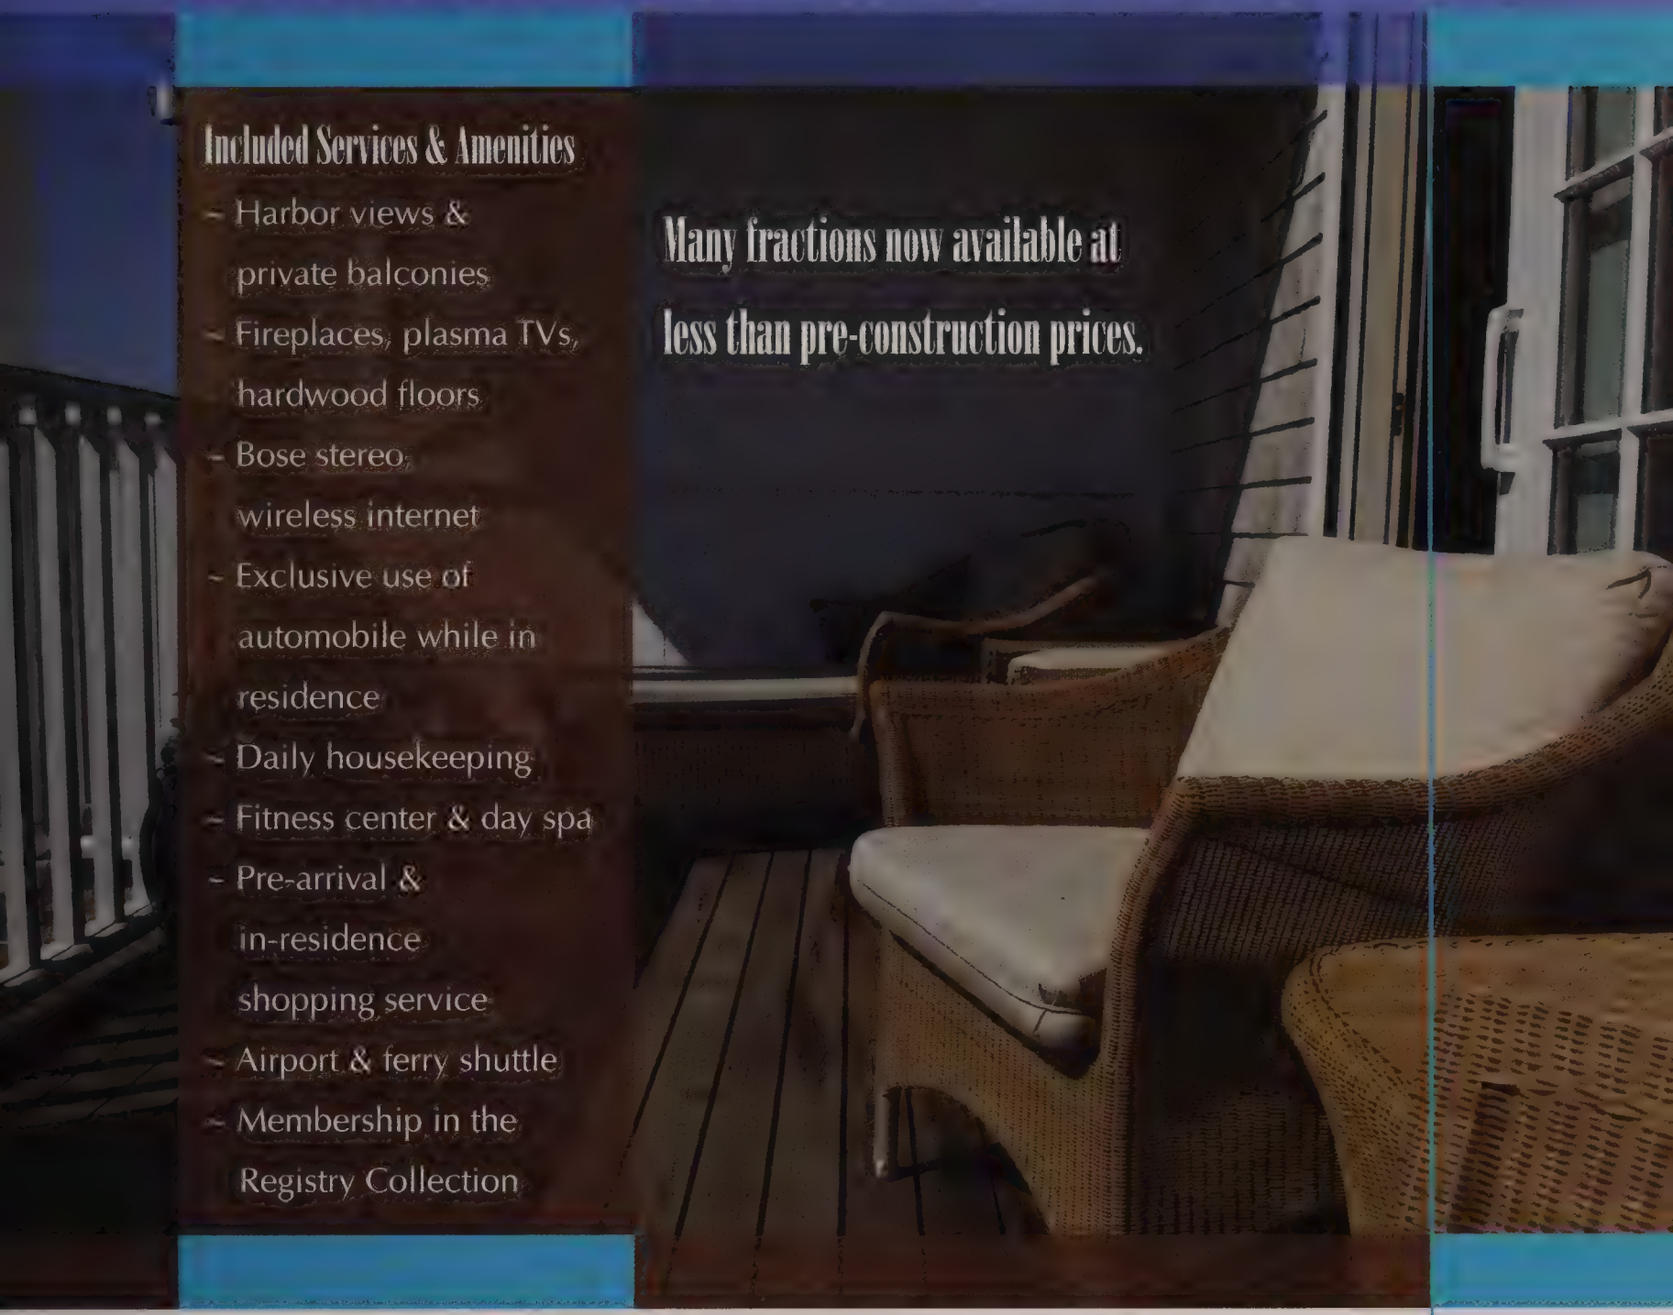
Responding to a disparaging remark about Nantucket, another woman said, "I was married on Nantucket," prompting someone else to ask, "And how long did that last?"

Other topics of conversation ranged from the Kardashians to butt waxing, which made for an edifying evening, especially when one man pointed at a car from the 1960s and said, "Is that a chick magnet, or what?" To which another responded, "I had a similar one in college, which must mean I'm old, 'cause I'm sure as hell not rich."

You Are Hereby Banished From Red Sox Nation

It was hard to know what to pay attention to—the models or the clothing—when Fashionably Late at the Liberty Hotel hosted its final affair of the season to benefit Room to Grow.

Among the bold-faced names strutting their stuff on the catwalk were lovable restaurateur Dante de Magistris, incurable ham Christopher Myers, fashion luminaries Alexandra Hall and Lisa Pierpont, natural born Zoolander Mike Diskin, Colombia's answer to Ricky Martin, Ricardo Rodriguez (who brought along his own cheering section), tall, dark and handsome Paul Epstein (whose wife, Saskia, runs the organization) and others who were just too sexy for their shirts.



Aside from the heat (it was somewhat sweltering on the fifth floor) and the snippy girls with clipboards bossing everyone around (apparently, they're an indispensable part of any fashion show), it was a thoroughly entertaining evening.

My personal highlight: When the woman next to me asked who Paul Epstein was, I explained, "Saskia's husband and Theo's brother," to which she replied, "Oh. Who's Theo?" ✖✖✖

Making Tracks

My current playlist consists of the following albums: Peter Wolf's Midnight Souvenirs, Putumayo Kids Presents French Playground, Vampire Weekend's Contra, Charlotte Gainsbourg's IRM and Fruit Smoothie Groove. I'd say that sheds a light on my soul or, at the very least, my current place in life. In the Venn diagram of that collection, my son and I overlap in "The Green Fields of Summer," Wolf's duet with Neko Case.

At 64, the rocker-about-town still manages to woo fans of all ages. Back with the J. Geils Band but as unassuming as ever, he's known for prowling the city's clubs, scoping out new talent. In this issue, music editor Paul Robicheau explores Wolf's universal appeal and shares his own list of up-and-coming acts.

SOLID PERFORMERS

FOR A SUMMER MUSIC FESTIVAL, SOLID SOUND IS A FAR CRY FROM THE USUAL SODDEN PASTURES and port-a-potty scrums. Alt-country giants Wilco are "curating" the affair at MASS MoCA, the giant contemporary art complex in North Adams. The contents of the galleries are as integral to the lineup as the bands, making this probably the only time you'll view Leonard Nimoy's photography within earshot of a Mavis Staples concert. Along with shows by Wilco and its members' side projects, the three-day event, held Aug. 13–15, sports comedy acts, jazz and indie groups, and Vermont's Bread and Puppet theater company. ANDREW RIMAS

QUICK HITS

King of the concert hall, the grand piano is capable of sweeping away an audience without so much as a backing cello. M. Steinert & Sons, a Steinway dealer on Boylston, shared these tidbits about the top of the orchestral food chain.

A Steinway D Concert Grand piano requires 900 feet of string wire, with a tension of 45,373 lbs. Much like the atmosphere in the room when its price is discussed. It weighs 990 lbs. So if the Steinway had a personal soundtrack, it would use a tuba.

Biggest is the concert grand, at 8' 11". Smallest is the spinet, at 36". All of them make the piccolo look pretty inadequate.

It takes 7,500 moving parts to make the "action"—the mechanism of hammers, keys and strings—work. On the other hand, it only takes one cartoon rabbit to use it as a murder weapon.

Beauty

Brighten Up

Chemical peels bring many things to mind, none of them particularly pleasant. Leave it to Bliss to turn a scary-sounding service into a luxurious experience. With the spa about to open, I decided to check out the "Bright Stuff Facial," which targets hyperpigmentation and helps to diminish dark spots. The tingly treatment begins with a five-minute peel containing Vitamin C powder, salicylic and glycolic acids, and a sanitizing booster. Next, a refreshingly cool collagen mask is applied to repair and rejuvenate the skin. An optional light therapy (at no extra cost or discomfort) kills lurking bacteria waiting to surface. As everything works its magic, a hand, neck and foot massage makes you forget you were there for a facial in the first place. After my hour was up, I had a smooth glow that improved as the week went on.

Jerky Boy

Officials from the Rose Kennedy Greenway Conservancy wanted local lunch options to lure more foot traffic, and Ed Cornelia wanted a place to park his truck. Now one of a small group of vendors peddling street food along Atlantic Avenue's central artery, the software-salesman-turned-shashlik pitmaster serves barbecue and vegetarian salads from around the world. Try a soft bun piled with crisp slaw and jerk chicken—meltingly tender meat laced with Scotch bonnet chiles, cilantro, ginger, lime, brown sugar and warm spices—with cool, garlicky tzatziki on the side.

Going Out

GONE FISHING

Luka Stipanov has one more hurdle to clear. He's hired the staff. He's created the menu. He's gutted what was once the infamous Hank's, Downtown Crossing's one-stop shop for a beer and some stolen merchandise. As soon as the fire marshal gives the OK, all the opening stresses will disappear, and he'll be free to enjoy 15-hour days spent helping others relax.

Together with his wife, Beth, Stipanov has constructed the Barracuda Tavern as a kind of universal fish shack serving the relaxed seaside plates seen locally, in their honeymoon destination of Key West, and in Europe. "I grew up in Croatia, on the Adriatic, and it's always been my dream to open up a little tavern," Stipanov says. His parents ran a spot by the shore, "and their whole thing was going out to the docks, buying fresh, and if you run out for the day, you run out."

Having met at the Littlest Bar and married at Kennedy's, the Stipanovs know the block. Being industry folk, they aim to please their neighbors. "I want to be a local place for my kind of people who work late and want something to eat," Stipanov explains. "A place where people can hang out—not a turn 'em and burn 'em, but more of a social club."

All are welcome to join the club for fish tacos ($7), squid salad ($11) or Key lime pie ($6) from lunchtime to 1:30 am. A selection of microbrews or a $3.50 Bud shouldn't scare anyone off, though barracuda, an occasional weekend special, is another story. Or it might just lure in some adventurous diners.

THE REAL DEAL

As American palates ripened to the taste of Greek yogurt, Sophia Georgoulopoulos saw an opportunity. The Kalamata native, who follows her grandmother's recipe, scalds milk from Vermont sheep and goats (not cows), mixes in active cultures and lets it rest for the better part of 12 hours. The ultra-thick yogurt easily holds a spoon—you'd never guess it's low-fat—and boasts an almost cheesy tang. Grab a quart ($6) from her Belmont market. And to beat the heat, a bowl of her tart fro-yo.

Drink of the Moment

Mixing It Up

Like the new Louis Boston downstairs, the cocktail menu at Sam's feels cleaner and more restrained than you might expect. There are creative selections and some novel brands used in intriguing combinations: whiskey and plum wine, Chartreuse and ginger beer. But at the top of the list sit two highballs, and here's where the decorum decelerates. THE NARCISSIST ($12) is the brainchild of Brooklynite Jon Parsons, while Bostonian Jon Rogers created PANDORA'S BOX ($12).

"We have a poking-each-other-in-the-ribs competition," Rogers says about this contest between local and outsider, good versus evil. "How about law versus chaos?" Parsons asks.

His Narcissist was born during a lazy Sunday at Williamsburg's Sweet Ups, when boredom led Parsons to carve his name into the preserved Asian-pear garnishes. Starting with a classic Polish combination of Zubrówka (bison-grass vodka) and apple juice, he adds simple syrup and passion-fruit liqueur. This slices through the tartness with a sustained note of sweetness.

Rogers' Pandora's Box ($12) cuts to the chase. Mixing gin, açaí liqueur, and grapefruit and lemon juices, his drink starts with an acid punch before a clean, agave-nectar finish—sweet without the sticky.

In hefty rocks glasses, both cocktails feel like something James Coburn would down at a patio party before he punched you in the mouth. Asked for her preference—with Rogers standing nearby—bartender Jess Li opts for Pandora's Box. "I'm a gin person though," she clarifies. "Until it makes me angry." Best bet: Enjoy 'em both.

BACK TO BACK BAY

Geoffrey's Cafe makes a return.

REMEMBER WHEN Geoffrey's Cafe had a Back Bay location? Well, owners Michael Aplin and Brian Spencer are reopening in the middle of October in the Berkeley Street space that housed Laurel. They'll start serving dinner first—with prices no higher than $14.95—then plan to add lunch within a few weeks, Spencer says. The Geoffrey's in Roslindale will remain in business. Any more Geoffrey's in the works? "Who knows?" Spencer laughs.

AT QUINCY'S MARINA BAY, Siros' owner Kristie Henriksen has opened Port 305. Executive chef Marc Vierbickas is serving up a large menu, ranging from Maine steamers to St. Louis BBQ ribs to grilled flatbreads, in a Peter Niemitz–designed space with a full wall of windows opening out to the pier.

ATTENTION, PANCAKE FANS: The folks behind the ever-popular Deluxe Town Diner in Watertown will open their new outlet next month in nearby Newton Centre. "It was a train station before it was a Starbucks, so there's a lot to do, like building a kitchen," co-owner Darl Levy says. The Deluxe Station Diner will serve breakfast, lunch, dinner and dishes to go. Expect a similar menu, a bit more seating than the original Town Diner and a "neat setting treated with historic respect," she adds.

CLOSINGS (AND POSSIBLE REOPENINGS): Tealuxe on Newbury Street has poured its last cup... or has it? A note on the door tells us the store lost its lease and hopes to reopen on Newbury Street around January of 2011. Margaritaville redux: According to its website, the recently closed Cottonwood Café is "exploring new venues and hopes to reopen in three to six months."

PUTTIN' ON THE RITZ

Giving the luxe life a spin

THE GREAT GATSBY THREW dazzling garden parties. He wore a pink suit and silk shirts in coral, lavender, faint orange and monograms of Indian blue. He was a shiny neon sign obsessed with a green light who paraded around town in a yellow Rolls-Royce.

I always related to the narrator, Nick Carraway. He's quiet, reflective and, like myself, I think he'd be perfectly content with a Honda. Of course, we're happy to dabble in grandeur, and when I received an offer of a Rolls-Royce for the weekend, I grabbed it. My friends were getting married in Newport, and here was a chance to turn Aquidneck Island into my own East and West Egg.

453-hp ego boost

I was nervous on my way to pick up the 2010 Phantom Drophead Coupe. (That's pronounced coo-pay. I don't know why, and I didn't want to ask and embarrass myself in front of the car.) There's a 453-hp, 6.8-liter V-12 engine under the brushed, stainless-steel hood. It has 21" wheels, teak decking inspired by America's Cup yachts and dealer options that cost well over my car's resale value. The Phantom is meant to stand out, and as such, it's a very polarizing vehicle.

I wasn't even out of the driveway before I received my first thumbs-up from a passerby. Less than a mile later, the first middle finger was waved in my direction. "I think this guy is giving you the finger, too," my girlfriend said during mile four, as an 18-wheeler swerved near, blaring its horn. "No, never mind, he's giving us the 'let's switch' sign.'" It was rush hour; I was antsy and picturing a truck tire destroying the $12,000 paint job on my $500,000 loaner. So I flipped a bird of my own.

It was hard to relax in my luxury automobile. I admit, during that first afternoon I was a bit of a pill. Seems the Rolls is more fun to be driven in than to drive. The America's Cup styling is appropriate because at 18-feet long and almost three tons, the Coupe steers like a boat. This isn't a vehicle for hairpin turns. For my passengers, though, relaxing wasn't a problem, and they all took the opportunity to lounge in the sun, role play as young moguls or simply sleep on this leather sofa on wheels. Meanwhile, I just kept my hands at 10 and two, smiled nervously at other drivers and exhaled deeply whenever I stepped out the suicide doors.

But I always looked forward to climbing back in. One has to show off a little, and the following day we left downtown Newport, cruised past the vineyards and the polo matches, and made our way to the modest, West Egg side of the island, where I had to make a vital stop: my high school.

Of course, being July, no one was there. Not my stentorian dorm master. Not the girl who took me as her pity date to the winter formal. Just some sad summer-schoolers, who hopefully learned from an alum that with a little hard work, you, too, can fake a better life.

On the way out of town, I learned that being rich apparently saves you money, as the hotel elected not to charge me for parking. After all, a Phantom out front is a free boost to an establishment's cultural cachet. That, or my cargo shorts and old T-shirt suggested that I might not have the cash on me.

Fifty miles later, we made one last stop by my folks' house, where my father got a kick out of pushing all the buttons on the dash, which he's always yelled at me for doing. He even described the Phantom as "sexy," a word I don't recall him saying before. My mother enjoyed a Sunday cruise, but afterward confessed she'd prefer something she could abuse, which was disconcerting to hear, both as her son and the owner of her old car.

In the end, the Phantom was fun to drive, in no small part, because it gave my friends a chance to climb behind the wheel, to imagine themselves as the owner of a seaside mansion or a shiny pink suit. I was happy to observe, then hand back the keys and write it all down. ✖✖✖

LOVE LETTER

DO YOU REMEMBER HOW MUCH I LOVE YOU?
I do. I had all but given up on love. You found me and showed me the true meaning of it. You accepted me for who I was, you looked into my heart and touched it. And in this last year, when I was left with imperfections, you only loved me more. You say your heart only knows one thing—love for me—so I want to tell you from the bottom of my heart, thank you for loving me unconditionally, and I love you more and more each day. Helaine

P.S. Happy birthday, my love.

To the aholes who won't stop at the crosswalk at Walnut and Austin streets in Newtonville:

I thought I'd seen everything there was to see on Walnut Street. Highlights include being honked at for daring to cross during a blizzard and seeing a man scream and wave his fists at a woman for daring to step off the curb in front of his car (at a stop sign). During the morning rush, a visually impaired man and his seeing-eye dog strayed off the sidewalk on Walnut and were obviously disoriented near the crosswalk. Rather than slow down and give him the benefit of well, being blind, at least three cars whizzed past the man and his guide dog without missing a beat, or breaking their cell-phone conversations. I was glad the man could only hear it.

THE HALF-LIFE OF FRIENDSHIP

Writerly sisters and soul mates

THE HAPPY CONFLUENCE OF bonds that brought local writers Gail Caldwell and Caroline Knapp into deep friendship included their single status, their love for rowing in sculls and sobriety—Caldwell achieved it earlier, Knapp later and famously. That, and their respective literary sensibilities. And though childless, they both doted on their dogs: Gail had Clementine; Caroline had Lucille. Endlessly walking their pets, rowing and talking, the friends were both inward sorts. Caroline wore "her reserve like silken armor." Or as she described it: "I'm the merry recluse! And Gail is the cheerful depressive."

Let's Take The Long Way Home: A Memoir of Friendship
by Gail Caldwell

The Boston Globe's former chief book critic reflects on her relationship with fellow writer and Phoenix columnist Caroline Knapp.

These paradoxical styles complemented each other, and the two soul mates found a connection different from romantic love. Friendship is a language, and they spoke theirs on leisurely, life-inquiring strolls around Fresh Pond. Then along came that cloud in the sky to interrupt it all: cancer, rapid decline, death. An ongoing battle had brewed over Caroline's smoking, and here was its extreme consequence. But her fading afforded a new intimacy, and we get the gracefulness of Caldwell's musings about the painfully odd emptiness of losing a best friend. And then this: Clementine gets attacked by a pitbull. Loss always has other zingers up its sleeve. ✖✖✖

FROM PAGE 124: "Once she referred to the core ambiguities of life as 'the dark side of joy,' and here, these days, has been the reverse: a happy limbo in which I have brought her along on the journey. The writer's self-imposed fugue state. She has been thoroughly alive in the meadows and woods with the dogs, through each rowing lesson and argument and carefree phone call. Her death these days is somewhere down the hall, behind a closed but unlocked door. But for now she is river-tan and laughing, and pretty soon the phone will ring and one of us will say 'What are you doing?' and it will all begin again."

TALK OF THE TAVERN

Harvard Square has a new hangout.

EGGS AND HAM The selection of starters is a Russell House strongpoint.

TIFFANI FAISON DRAWS stares wherever she goes. On a recent night out at Russell House Tavern, I watched heads swivel and folks try to remember how they knew the petite, curly-haired redhead. Her stint on the first season of Top Chef—Faison was the runner-up—feels like a lifetime ago, she said as we settled into Harvard Square's newest take on the gastropub. This spring, Faison was hired as the executive chef at Rocca in the South End. It's her first leading role after working at O Ya, the Straight Wharf on Nantucket, Daniel in Las Vegas and several Todd English restaurants.

"It's been a whirlwind three months," she told me. "But great to finally have my own platform."

At Russell House, Faison and I made ourselves familiar with the upstairs bar, a tiled space with communal tables and windows that open to the street. Scouring the list, she observed, "They've got a lot of wines from the Northwest, and the beer selection's great." During college Faison bartended at the Pyramid Brewery in Berkeley, Calif., where she "geeked out on beer for a bit." We both ended up with Oregon beverages: the Rogue Dead Guy maibock ($6) for me, a summery glass of Acrobat pinot gris ($9) for her.

Faison's time on the West Coast was limited to college and a few years after. As a military kid, she moved often, hopping from Germany to Oklahoma, Greece and then California. Boston became home shortly after her Top Chef run.

"When I'm away from San Francisco, I miss it, sure," she admitted. "But when I'm away from Boston, I yearn for this city."

As Faison explained the recent changes at Rocca—she's revamped the entire menu— we looked over Russell House's options. There were raw bar items, small plates, slightly larger appetizers, pizzas and entrées of the hearty, pub-fare variety.

To start, Faison selected the daily terrine made from Ozark Berkshire pork headcheese ($7), a healthy slab of chunky meat served alongside a fennel gelée and toasted baguette slices. "I've been hearing about this egg," she said, referring to our next dish, the crispy soft-poached Chip-In Farm egg ($7) from the small-plates list. The perfectly poached, breadcrumb-coated ovoid came with greens and toasted brioche. We were instant fans.

Tiffani's picks

Crispy soft-poached egg

Cotechino sausage pizza

R. House burger

A chilled lobster pot ($15) was a little underwhelming, arriving packed with lobster and bits of cornbread but very little of the promised chorizo aioli. Crab and Old Bay biscuits ($14) were tiny, two-bite–sized morsels dolloped with a faintly sweet roasted-fennel jam. Faison quickly deconstructed them, looking for more seasoning.

We moved onto the cotechino sausage pizza ($13), which Faison chose so she could taste the house-made ricotta. (She picked the creamy cheese off with a fork before demolishing the slice). A big advocate of the from-scratch approach, Faison finished off the crisped crust with a nod of approval before offering to give me a recipe for her no-fail dough.

To round out our tour, we split the well-seasoned R. House burger ($10) topped with cheddar and a mound of bacon. Faison requested Tabasco aioli for the fries, which hit the spot.

"This place is pitch-perfect for what it wants to be," she said as we polished off the plate. Pointing to the old photographs depicting scenes from the square's past, she added, "It plays into the current pub craze and still pays tribute to the neighborhood."

There was talk of an after-dinner bourbon (the list was extensive and tempting) but only a few bites into the carrot-cake bread pudding ($8), Faison's girlfriend was texting her movie times. "It's my first night off in three months," she said. "I'm fully taking advantage." ×××

BRO, NO

Please don't ice me.

I ENJOY DRINKING GAMES. Beer die, beer pong, Beirut, kings, flip-cup, yee-haw, boat races—I've done them all. Usually badly and with great enthusiasm. I'm not a snob about drinking games. In the name of athletic competition, I've chugged lemon-lime Mad Dog and funneled beer with Spam and mayonnaise in it. I even enjoy playing the stupidest drinking game yet invented, three-gulp. (If you manage to drink your beer in three gulps, then you, umm... well, that's it, actually.) But I just can't work up much enthusiasm for the latest craze. I'm sorry, but I'm taking a pass on bros icing bros.

The idea behind "bros icing bros" is simple: Ambush your friends with Smirnoff Ice. Then they have to drink it. Unless they're ready with an Ice of their own, in which case you have to drink both Ices. And the context of the situation doesn't matter. Board meeting, operating room, funeral—you have to play. Perhaps you've recently been on a plane that was inexplicably delayed at the gate. You know why? Because the pilot got totally iced by his bropilot.

My problem with bros icing bros is that it's predicated on irony—you see, the type of guys who call each other "bro" are the type of guys who'd drink Jäger bombs, not malternative beverages! That's unexpected and therefore humorous! But here's the problem: Grown men are buying Smirnoff Ice for the express purpose of playing this game. I know at least two who've done so in recent weeks. In fact, the reason there haven't been any terror attacks lately is because Osama bin Laden has been too busy icing his bros. According to intercepted terrorist chatter, he now calls himself Brosama Been Icin'.

Now, if you had some Smirnoff Ice left over from a party, and you invented this game to get rid of it, that would be funny. But if you drive to the store, pull out your wallet and purchase a six-pack of Ice, that's no longer ironic. It just means you really want to drink a sweet, sodalike alcoholic beverage. While on one knee. And if you enjoy Smirnoff Ice, or Twisted Tea, or Mike's Hard Lemonade, more power to you. But just don't pretend that you're unhappy about it, because the punishment for not playing the game is—get ready—you don't have to play the game.

That's right. If you opt not to drink when presented with an Ice, then you're forever barred from playing. Which means that if you don't play a game that you don't want to play, the consequence is that you can't play it. That's like telling me, "If you don't watch this episode of The View right now, you're never going to be able to watch it again!" Really? Awesome.

If you drive to the store, pull out your wallet and purchase a six-pack of Ice, that's no longer ironic.

BIB began at colleges, but I was at a cookout in Needham when I first got iced. And that should tell you all you need to know about the game. Some fads stick around because they're actually fun (see: flip-cup, Beirut, or drinking every time LeBron James does something egomaniacal), but I think this one has run its course. When guys are saying, "Honey, could you hold the baby while I chug this Smirnoff Ice?" you're probably looking at a trend on the wane.

Plus, isn't this game sexist? Why can't women carry around Smirnoff Ice all day like a bunch of d-bags? I don't think I'm the only one who's pondered this question, based on the fact that someone has already reserved the web address hosicinghos.com.

Just so I don't feel like a complete Grumpy Gus about a game that's hip with the kids, allow me to suggest some variations on bros icing bros. Because, for a game to become a fixture, it must evolve—basketball, you know, was once played with hula hoops and monkey skulls. And now it's only played that way in certain Maine men's leagues.

So how about this: If your bro hands you a baby, you have to adopt it. If your bro hands you a photo of Ben Franklin, you have to go fly a kite in a lightning storm. If your bro gives you some cilantro, you've got to add it to whatever you're cooking, even if you're allergic and think it tastes like soap. That's just bros spicing bros!

For my part, I'm out. Banished like Pete Rose. The second time I was iced, I refused the Smirnoff and drank a beer. Which, you know, isn't allowed. But that's OK, because I'm already working on two new drinking games that I think are going to be quite the rage. I call them "golf" and "fishing." The best part is, they can even be combined with other games. Although, I admit, it's hard to hit a lob wedge while playing Edward 40-Hands. ✖✖✖

My top-five New England athletes

IN MY LAST COLUMN, I started a top-10 list of my favorite Boston athletes. Here are my five faves, a personal pantheon of greats.

5. Ray Bourque

Older readers may argue for Bobby Orr, but I never saw him, and this is my damn list. Bourque—one of the greatest skaters to ever grace the ice—changed the way hockey was played, keeping his game at an unparalleled level for more than 20 years. It's a shame that Bourque had to go to Colorado to get the Stanley Cup, but he always evoked an astounding level of respect among Bruins fans. Mayor Thomas Menino threw him a championship rally for his Stanley Cup, even though he won it with the Avalanche. No. 4 deserved it. And, like Orr, Bourque settled in Greater Boston after retiring, so he'll always be one of our own.

4. Larry Bird

The man who saved pro basketball (with help from the guy on the Left Coast) is one of the toughest athletes I've ever seen. Magic Johnson was an all-time great, but Bird was better. He could do more, especially shoot the ball when it mattered. The anchor of the Celtics' original "Big Three," Bird couldn't fly, but he shot and passed and rebounded his way to three titles. One of my favorite memories of Bird is of him standing on a balcony at Government Center, calling out Moses Malone after the Celts beat the Rockets for the 1981 title, saying, "Moses Malone eats s!" Bird was one of the original trash talkers. The problem for opponents was that he could back it up.

3. David Ortiz

Red Sox owner John Henry got it right when he called David Ortiz, "The greatest clutch hitter in the history of the Red Sox." Between 2003 and 2008, he was the best in baseball. Signed as an afterthought at the behest of friend Pedro Martinez, Ortiz led a record-setting offense in 2003 with Manny Ramirez watching his back. After taking Game 6 in New York to tie the series 3-3, Ortiz whispered in my ear. "Trust me, we are going to win this fing thing tomorrow!" Even though they fell a game short then, Ortiz's heroics in the postseason the following year earned him MVP of the ALCS win over the Yankees. Despite all that stuff about banned substances, how could anybody argue that his walk-off hits aren't his legacy?

2. Pedro Martinez

Not only was Pedro the best pitcher I'd ever seen, he brought a different energy to the ballyard. I loved spotting those Dominican Republic flags flying throughout the park, as if it was a World Cup soccer game. Pedro's 1999 season was in a league of its own, finishing 23-4 with a 2.07 E.R.A. and 313 strikeouts (he got the "triple crown" of pitching), winning his second Cy Young Award. He should've won the MVP Award, too. At that year's All-Star Game at Fenway Park, Pedro struck out five batters in two innings, including Sammy Sosa and Mark McGwire. I hope he retires for good soon—the Hall of Fame needs him.

1. Tom Brady

When it comes to winning and dominating, Tom Brady is the top dog. Since Drew Bledsoe's fortunate injury, Brady solidified into one of the best, if not "the" best quarterback football has ever seen. He was instrumental in turning the Patriots from a joke into a dynasty, guiding the team to three Vince Lombardi trophies in four seasons. And they should've won a fourth against the Giants. I love watching the opposition's fear when the ball is in No. 12's hands. His ability to win with no-name receivers and bend-but-don't-break defenses is legendary. Others have had better numbers, but none are better players. And he's not done just yet. I think he has two or three more championships in him. ×××

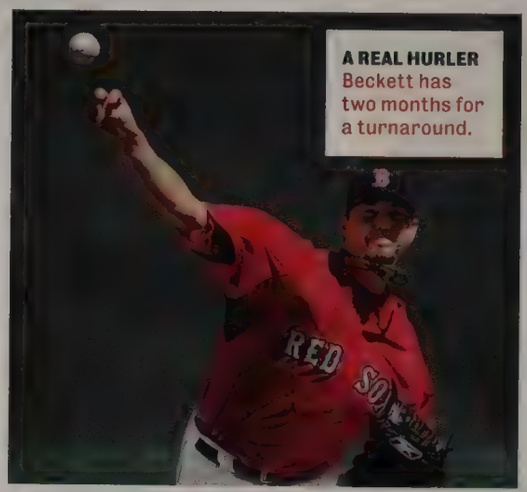
ON BECKETT, BREES, DJ AND THE DIESEL

5 ON THE SOX



Ace's Time to Shine Enough is enough with Josh Beckett. Coming off two straight subpar postseasons—and a Garcés-fat extension—this was Beckett's year to reemerge as the ace, not to mention the emotional leader of a potentially legendary rotation. Instead, all we've got are three wins and a bad back. Balls. Two months of heroics can still save his 2010 disaster, but anything less… would be uncivilized. (I mean insanely disappointing.)

Bye Bye, Beltre So, how have you enjoyed your Adrian Beltre? Despite his insatiable appetite for injured outfielders, the guy's pretty much living Boston's best-case scenario. He's been their most consistent bat, predictably nasty at third and even though I'm absolutely terrified of him, he seems like a decent guy. Unfortunately that all adds up to Beltre scoring a sweet deal somewhere else next season, but I'll still be a fan.

Boston's Newest Iron Man On Aug. 2, Kevin Youkilis became the 14th member of the 2010 Sox to make a trip to the DL. Pretty crazy. Even crazier? JD Drew isn't one of them! That's like seeing the headline "Mean Girls Actress Caught Blowing Coke in L.A. Night Club," and then learning Lindsay was in New York all weekend (blowing coke in a Manhattan night club).

Jacoby's Back I feel like I'm obsessing about this a little, but the Jacoby Ellsbury saga continues to blow my mind. The stars were aligned for him to own Boston by the end of this season. He was supposed to make the leap, and now we spend afternoons wondering whether he'll get booed at Fenway? Never saw this coming.

Designated Hilarity If Youk's thumb injury knocks him out for the season, and the Sox, understandably, start to lose sight of the Yanks and Rays, I have only one request for Tito—get Papi in the field! He's really not that bad defensively, and watching him flop and shuffle around the bag is always awesome. So what if he gets worn down? You're not picking up his option anyway. (Just kidding… kind of.)

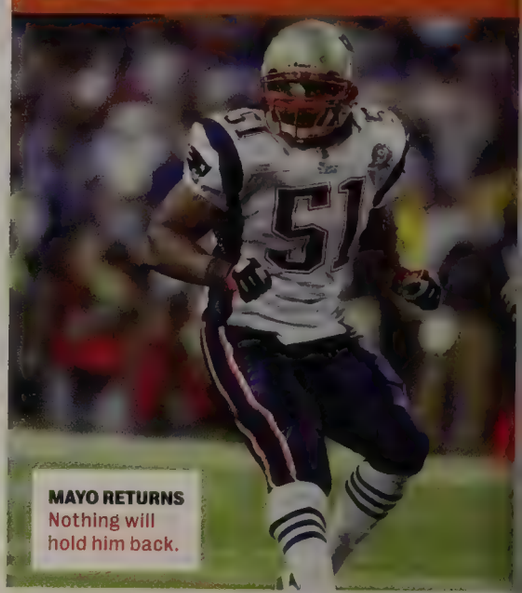
A REAL HURLER Beckett has two months for a turnaround.

1 DIRECT REQUEST

Mr. Coach Belichick: Just wanted to drop you a quick note to let you know how much I appreciate your work, and, if I could, offer two simple words of advice: Aaron Schobel. See what I mean? Good talk. I'll catch you later.

3 DATES TO WATCH

8/12: "Are you ready for some back-uuuups!?!? It's a Thursday night paaaar-TAAY!!" The Pats open the preseason at home against Drew Brees' mole and the Saints.



8/13: It's a shame that it took so long to get this right, but it's still great to see Dennis Johnson inducted into the Basketball Hall of Fame.

8/14: Clay Buchholz turns 26, and… you know what? I can't even make fun of him anymore. He's just too good!! (Look, I'm even gushing with exclamation points. Damn you, Buchholz.)

2 RANDOM PATS THOUGHTS

Return of the Condiment I'm obviously excited about Wes Welker's ridiculous return, but I'm straight giddy about a fully healthy Jerod Mayo. His 2009 was a lot like Ellsbury's 2010 (obsessing?): a potentially career changing season that was sabotaged at take-off. Of course, Mayo still led the Pats in tackles, but this year he'll be a Pro Bowler (in my Madden season, at the very least).

Biggest Catch With David Patten retiring last month, I got to thinking: Is his catch in the first quarter of Super Bowl XXXVI the biggest in Patriots history? I mean, such a catch would have to come in one of the three Super Bowl seasons, right? In that case, you're hard-pressed to find a better mix of difficulty and significance.

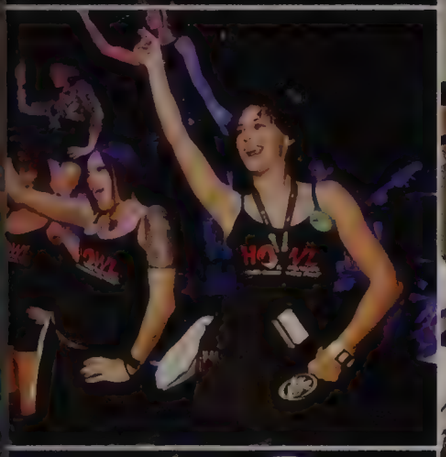
MAYO RETURNS Nothing will hold him back.

4 ON THE BIG ARISTOTLE

The Big Moniker Now that the signing's official, I guess Shaq needs a new nickname, and after much (OK, 10 minutes) of thought, I'm going with "The Green Mile." Honorable mentions: "The U.S.S. Shaqstitution," "Shaq Revere" and "I Can't Believe How Seriously I Took This."

The Big Reality Star Not sure if he's got another season in him, but next year I'd love to see a Shaq vs. Fenway segment. I don't want to give too much away, but it's nine innings of Shaq trying to sit in one of Fenway's miniature seats without either breaking it or flipping out and tearing it from the foundation. Actually, forget it. I still wouldn't watch his show.

The Big Space Filler Oh yeah, right, he's also here to play basketball. I'm still on the fence in terms of how much Shaq will help the C's on the floor. On one hand, he can still control the boards. On the other, that's about all he can still do. Either way, Shaq's production won't make or break the season. He's still a big name, but nowhere near a big factor.



The Big Reality Star Vol. 2 How about "Shaq vs. Newbury"? In this one, Shaq walks up and down Newbury Street, drawing everyone's love and attention. But he better watch out for jealous Yellow Lamborghini Guy, who will do anything to reclaim the gawkers he wrongfully believes are rightfully his. (If Shaq makes it through the course, he's then challenged to a one-armed push-up contest.)

Soroff On COURTNEY LEWIS

The orchestra conductor talks about overrated composers, makeout music and sexy instruments.

UP-AND-COMER COURTNEY LEWIS, 26, is the conductor and founding music director of the Discovery Ensemble, a Boston chamber orchestra known for its unusual repertoire and outreach to inner-city schoolchildren. Lewis is also the associate conductor of the Minnesota Orchestra. Born in Belfast, Northern Ireland, he studied clarinet and composition at the University of Cambridge and attended the Royal Northern College of Music. From 2007 to 2009, he was the Zander fellow in conducting with the Boston Philharmonic. He made his American debut with the Saint Louis Symphony in 2008 and has worked with the BBC Philharmonic, the Tulsa and Lexington symphonies, the Liverpool Mozart Orchestra and other smaller ensembles. He lives in Boston and Minnesota.

Jonathan Soroff: Most memorable live performance you've ever seen?
Courtney Lewis: Beethoven Nine by the Philharmonic in London, five years ago. The orchestra was like watching people who were on drugs, they were so insanely in tune with each other, and they moved in this sort of mesmerizing way.

Do you listen to classical music exclusively?
No, I listen to a lot of shamelessly trashy pop music. I'm an addict.

What are the top-three things in heavy rotation on your iPod?
The new Scissor Sisters album, the new Kylie Minogue and lots of Lady Gaga.

You're one of classical music's big heartthrobs right now. Any thoughts on that?
It's very exciting. Hopefully, it'll get me a bit more action the next time I'm back in Boston.

Oddest way you've used a baton?
[Laughs.] Oh, dear. I guess tormenting an airport security guard who was convinced that it was a weapon of mass destruction.

Most overrated composer?
Shostakovich. No interest, whatsoever.

Underrated?
We're doing a really cool piece this season by a composer called Schreker, an Austrian from the early 20th century whom no one knows anything about, but he produced a lot of very cool music.

Least favorite instrument?
I used to play the clarinet. It was my principal study, and I was so focused on it. It doesn't really excite me very much anymore.

Most difficult part of conducting?
The psychological element of not actually playing any music but trying to persuade—in a very kind and invisible sort of way—40 people to do what you want them to.

What do you think is the sexiest instrument?
I think female flutists can be very sexy, but I also think male trumpeters can be very sexy.

What's your seduction or makeout music?
At the moment, there's a song called "Sex and Violence" by the Scissor Sisters, and I also have a slightly shameless '80s Madonna section.

Favorite orchestra?
The Berlin Philharmonic and the Vienna Philharmonic. In America, Cleveland and Minnesota are my favorite big orchestras.

Favorite venue?
I'd love to conduct sometime soon at Symphony Hall in Boston. It's a pretty great hall.

What, actually, does a conductor do up there?
Everything except play the notes. Nothing is specified aside from the length of the note in classical music. The speed of the music, the volume, the way the phrase goes, the character of the music—all those things have to be modulated by the conductor.

So you're keeping order?
No. That's not a good way of putting it. If you're a taskmaster, you're not any good.

Do you have any superstitions or things you always do before a performance?
I kiss my cufflinks, which is a shameless ripoff from something that I read about Leonard Bernstein. He had a pair of cufflinks that Koussevitzky gave him, and he did it.

Pet peeve with respect to audiences?
I hate audiences giving bad performances standing ovations. It doesn't happen in Boston so much. It happens constantly in Minneapolis.

Conductor you most admire?
Simon Rattle.

Boxers or briefs?
Briefs. Calvin Klein.

Is conducting a workout?
Yes. I go through at least three shirts a concert.

Do you have a single favorite piece of music?
The opera Peter Grimes by Benjamin Britten.

Are people too serious about classical music?
Yeah. Very, very much so. You have to pay attention to music, but that doesn't mean being horrible and stiff and formal.

Do you consider yourself a control freak?
No. If you're a control freak, you stifle the really exciting things that happen naturally.

Why aren't there more female conductors?
There are a lot of them coming up. I heard from a female conductor that at the time when you need to be pushing really hard in your career, your 20s to 40s, you have to decide whether you want to have a family. It also must be hard for a woman to find a way to be authoritative without being domineering on the podium, because of people's prejudices.

Composer you'd most like to have dinner with?
I think Stravinsky. He had impeccable taste, knew everybody who was anyone in theater and the arts. It would have been fascinating.

How does it feel to have people staring at your ass while you're working?
[Laughs.] Seriously, I don't mind. It is a little bit upsetting when some 60-year-old lady tells you that's what she was doing.

If you were a musical instrument, what would you be, and why?
A French horn, because it can be very graceful and beautiful, but it can also be very potent and loud. ×××

LISTEN UP

OUR ANNUAL LIST OF BUZZ-WORTHY BANDS CAN NEVER KEEP UP WITH ALL THE GREAT ACTS ROCKING BOSTON. BUT WE CAN DROP ANOTHER BATCH OF 10 DIVERSE GROUPS THAT DESERVE YOUR ATTENTION.

by Paul Robicheau

BAD RABBITS

Talk about pulling a perfect trick out of the hat. Bad Rabbits have been recording their debut album in L.A. with producer Teddy Riley, originator of New Jack Swing, the late '80s/early '90s hybrid of dance-pop, hip-hop and R&B that inspired the hard-slamming band.

"It's a dream come true," drummer Sheel Davé says, noting Riley (who worked with Bobby Brown, Michael Jackson, and his own groups Guy and Blackstreet) is fastidious with details to nail the right sounds. "The first couple of days, we were like kids in school."

The Riley hookup came through online-streetwear force Karmaloop, which branched into music by distributing the group's EP Stick Up Kids for free. "People who never would've heard our music got an opportunity to hear it," guitarist Salim Akram says.

The two-year-old Rabbits, which also feature singer Dua Boakye, guitarist Santi Araujo and bassist Graham Masser, are hoping Riley can kick them to a level that eluded their previous outfit, the Eclectic Collective. "It was almost too eclectic," Akram says of that 10-piece ensemble with sax and turntables.

The leaner, meaner Bad Rabbits aren't for passive listening, reflecting hard-rock influences like the Deftones and At the Drive-In. "We want people to have fun," Akram says. "We're out here bugging out, doing our thing, having a blast. Why the hell are you standing there with your hands on your pocket?"

myspace.com/badrabbits

"WE WANT PEOPLE TO HAVE FUN."

"WE LIKE LOUD STUFF THAT CAN ALSO QUIET DOWN."

MAGIC MAGIC

Magic and witches may go together, but Magic Magic isn't from Salem—despite press reports that say so. "That's been a long-shrouded mystery," says guitarist Brendan Hughes, who suggests the mistake was perpetuated after a London Times review cited Salem before home fans even knew the band. "Are we spooky?"

If not spooky, the Dedham group's music is certainly haunting. It suggests the influence of the Jeff Buckley Band, as much for the quintet's textural dynamics (undercut by two drummers) as for singer/guitarist John Murphy's tempered yet charismatic lead.

"We like loud stuff that can also quiet down," Hughes says. "It's definitely more aggressive live. I've always liked when bands have very distinct recording sounds, and when you see them live, it's not always clean and nice-sounding, but intense."

The four-year-old group nails both ends of the spectrum, even though Murphy, bassist Nick Serra, and drummers Mike Hlady and Dylan Gough only recently passed the drinking age. Magic Magic has also grown prolific, recently pressing two new records to follow its 2008 debut. One was made at a Chelsea studio, the other banged out in the band's Norwood rehearsal space. Both convey a mature, atmospheric spell that's hard to pigeonhole.

U.K. management had helped Magic Magic land early gigs overseas, but Hughes says it's harder to tour the U.S. without a record label. "It was almost like we traveled to the other side of the Atlantic Ocean to get some attention over here, which is funny," he says. "For the most part, it's been do-it-yourself."

THE DAVID WAX MUSEUM

Missouri native David Wax fell in love with Mexican folk music during summers as a rural-development volunteer south of the border. After graduating summa cum laude from Harvard, Wax returned to the country on a fellowship to research the music.

But there's nothing academic about his songs with the David Wax Museum, a Mexo-Americana combo that blends son jarocho with folk-rock influences such as Bob Dylan, Uncle Tupelo and Wilco. "It would seem foreign for us to make something that isn't folk music for everyone," says Wax, adding of the Mexican element, "A lot of people don't even realize that's what is going on in the music. It's just something fun and upbeat and catchy."

The singer switches between his acoustic guitar and the Mexican jarana, while fiddler Suz Slezak also plays a donkey jawbone, which has rows of loose teeth to rub or shake. They supplement their duo with his accordion- and piano-playing cousin Jordan Wax, along with Mike Roberts, Jiro Kokubu and Alec Spiegelman, all on a mix of instruments. They'll rotate the cast in a Tuesday night August residency at the Lizard Lounge, on the heels of a fan-voted appearance at the Newport Folk Festival.

The band's 2009 album Carpenter Bird was a gem of rare beauty, and Wax is excited about follow-up Everything Is Saved, recorded in Maine with producer Sam Kassirer (Josh Ritter, Erin McKeown) and due in early 2011. "The thread [between styles] is a lot clearer," he says. "It conveys our live excitement."

davidwaxmuseum.com

JENNY DEE & THE DEELINQUENTS

Since she was a kid, Jen D'Angora had a thing for girl groups: Motown-styled acts where three singers flowed in choreography. But when D'Angora thought about starting one as an alternative to her other bands (garage institution the Downbeat 5 and disbanded punk-pop vehicle the Dents), no players came to mind. Plus, she adds, "I definitely didn't know any girls in that scene who'd get up there and do moves."

However, she found her first backup singer in younger sister Beka, who shared in childhood dance routines in Plymouth. And when D'Angora spoke with her bassist husband, Ed Valauskas (the Gentlemen, Gravel Pit), the rest fell into place. Valauskas had just played with rock veteran Tony Goddess (the Rudds, Papa Fritas), whose wife, Samantha, even filled out the vocal front line.

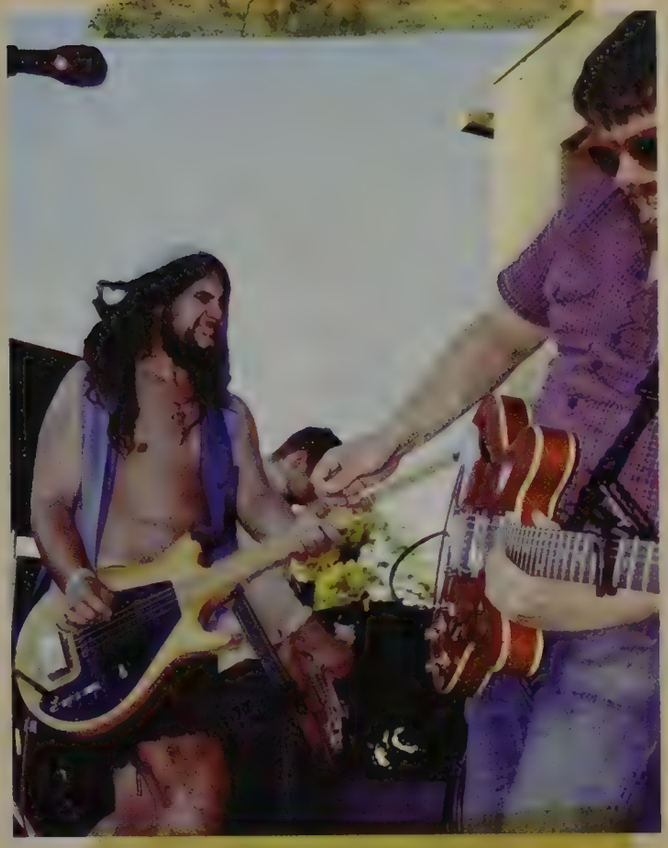
"This thing has taken off like a rocket," says D'Angora, who wrote 11 songs on the octet's debut Keeping Time. It includes a cover of the Flamin' Groovies' "Shake Some Action," which graced a 7-inch in Spain that led to a headlining tour of the country.

Not that she's keen about wearing matching dresses and tights each night. "That part kinda sucks actually," D'Angora says. "You have to look the part."

myspace.com/jennydeemusic

MOVERS & SHAKERS

Many bands have dreamed of recording in a remote, rustic shack. Movers & Shakers went ahead and did it, searching online rentals for a Maine hunting cabin. That's where they recorded the majority of their new album Larrabee, which is named after the shack's owners.



"You have to drive on a dirt road for 15 minutes to get to this cabin," singer/guitarist Matt Price says. "It definitely helped with staying focused and believing in what we're doing."

The results speak for themselves on the album, a raw but rich slice of American-styled rock that nods to the Replacements as well as to the Band. Price grew up in Mansfield as a punk-rock fan with bassist Dan Wallace, though the two later moved to Austin, Texas, to absorb the textures and emotions of roots music.

"I still like punk-rock music, but I'd definitely be bored if we were still playing stuff that straightforward," he says. "But that still shows as part of our live shows, with the energy."

The group has also been energized with the arrival of drummer Reid Calkin (ex-Protokoll) and guitarist Marc Valois, Price's foil as an alternate singer/songwriter. "We kinda push each other," Price says of Valois, who, along with Calkin is a fellow Middle East employee. "We'd hang out and play guitar and listen to music.... I wanted him in the band for a long time before he was actually in the band."

BEARSTRONAUT

Dave Martineau was literally in the closet when he recorded his vocals for Bearstronaut's 2009 debut Broken Handclaps. "It was definitely comfortable," Martineau says of that spot in the band's shared Lowell apartment. "I was just singing into my clothes."

Now the group's built a recording space in the apartment, which they've used in addition to professional studios for a new EP due this fall. They've already released "Shannon," a synth-wound track about a dance-floor pickup, as a free download.

"Your first album, you're trying to find your sound, and the [new] songs are little more cohesive," the singer/guitarist says. "I'd hope a listener would maybe say, 'That sounds like Bearstronaut.'"

After all, he only formed the band two years ago with fellow UMass/Lowell students Paul Lamontagne (guitar, keyboards), Phil Boisvert (bass, keyboards) and Luke Steere (drums), bonding over danceable rock like Daft Punk, Talking Heads and the Killers.

"We all are very interested in technology and the ever-expanding world of synths and PCs and DJ programs," Martineau says. "But we do try to keep an even keel. We're still a rock band."

BODEGA GIRLS

"We're the least serious people you'll ever meet," Evan "EvRock" Kenney says of Bodega Girls, a colorful electro-pop collective whose musical in-jokes draw flocks of hipsters.

The chorus to the group's flagship hit "She's Into Black Guys" features a reference to Cambridge club the Western Front. "A lot of the songs are based on people we know and their experiences," the singer says. And "We Are Losers" calls out scenesters by name, for what he describes as "an anthem for our recession friends who are looking at their lives and trying to figure their shit out."

Kenney, once of art-punk band Read Yellow, did the same thing with roots-rock scion Jake Brenna, and opted for a fun change of pace. They asked two Puerto Rican girls at a New York bodega to "show us what's cool around town," Kenney says, and after a night of crashing hip-hop clubs and loft parties, "We decided to create a whole act that was in dedication to those girls."

The act has grown to incorporate MC Mac from Big Digits, bassist Jay Cannava and singer Carmen O'Connor, who still works as a cocktail waitress at the Middlesex Lounge, where Bodega Girls' party nights are legendary. "The Middlesex gives us the forum to do whatever we want," Kenney says. "We really don't plan much in this band. We kind of let it move itself."

VIVA VIVA

With two divergent songwriters and a chaotic blues-rock glide shared through sporadic gigs, Viva Viva may not seem like the most stable band. But it's a relationship that somehow works.

"This is like a life thing for all of us," bassist Dan Burke says. "This is the band we're going to be in until someone croaks or loses their fingers or something."

It's been three years since Dave Vicini, who fronted the Lot Six alongside Burke, moved into a Jamaica Plain house with singer/guitarist Chris Warren from Officer May. The pair spent long nights recording on four-track. "They would get together over whiskey and whatever else and just crank out tunes," Burke says.

The songwriters have complementary personalities—Warren more prolific and diligent, Vicini more raw and free-wheeling—but they found common ground in the Kinks and '70s Stones. "It's basically like a push and pull," Burke says of the band, rounded out by drummer Dominic Mariano and keyboardist Fumika Kato.

Viva Viva's debut album, only available online, is finally set for release this fall on the new Fort Point Recordings. "Aspirations for success is a very subjective thing in music, especially nowadays," Burke says. "Success is having freedom."

MIGHTY TINY

The twisted world of Mighty Tiny extends from its music to the Venetian masks that members sport onstage. "Everyone in the band wants to make their own character and stage presence, and the masks definitely influence that," Matt Tompkins says. "If we can get away with [masks], we can get away with a lot of musical oddities as well."

Tompkins and fellow singer/songwriter Max Rose formed the band at Berklee two years ago and began layering the eccentricities. The two guitarists often slap their guitar strings in a rhythmic convulsion recalling Primus bassist Les Claypool (who has donned similar masks live), while violinist Amy Alvey and accordionist Kana Zink provide Gypsy-esque icing that nods to Gogol Bordello, whose "Start Wearing Purple" the band has covered on occasion.

But the sextet, filled out by bassist Dave Pezzano and drummer Noah Appel, also conveys songwriting chops that stand apart from many Boston bands. Influenced by dark lyricists like Tom Waits and Modest Mouse's Isaac Brock, Tompkins and Rose trade songs about a beheaded suitor and a little girl lost in a well where a would-be rescuer returns "missing most of his skin."

"We try to maintain a level of satire," Tompkins says of the group, which has released a self-made EP named Eat People and aims to expand its audience through diverse club bills. "Even though we're kooky and insane, we can appeal to a lot of different people. We end up with a strange demographic."

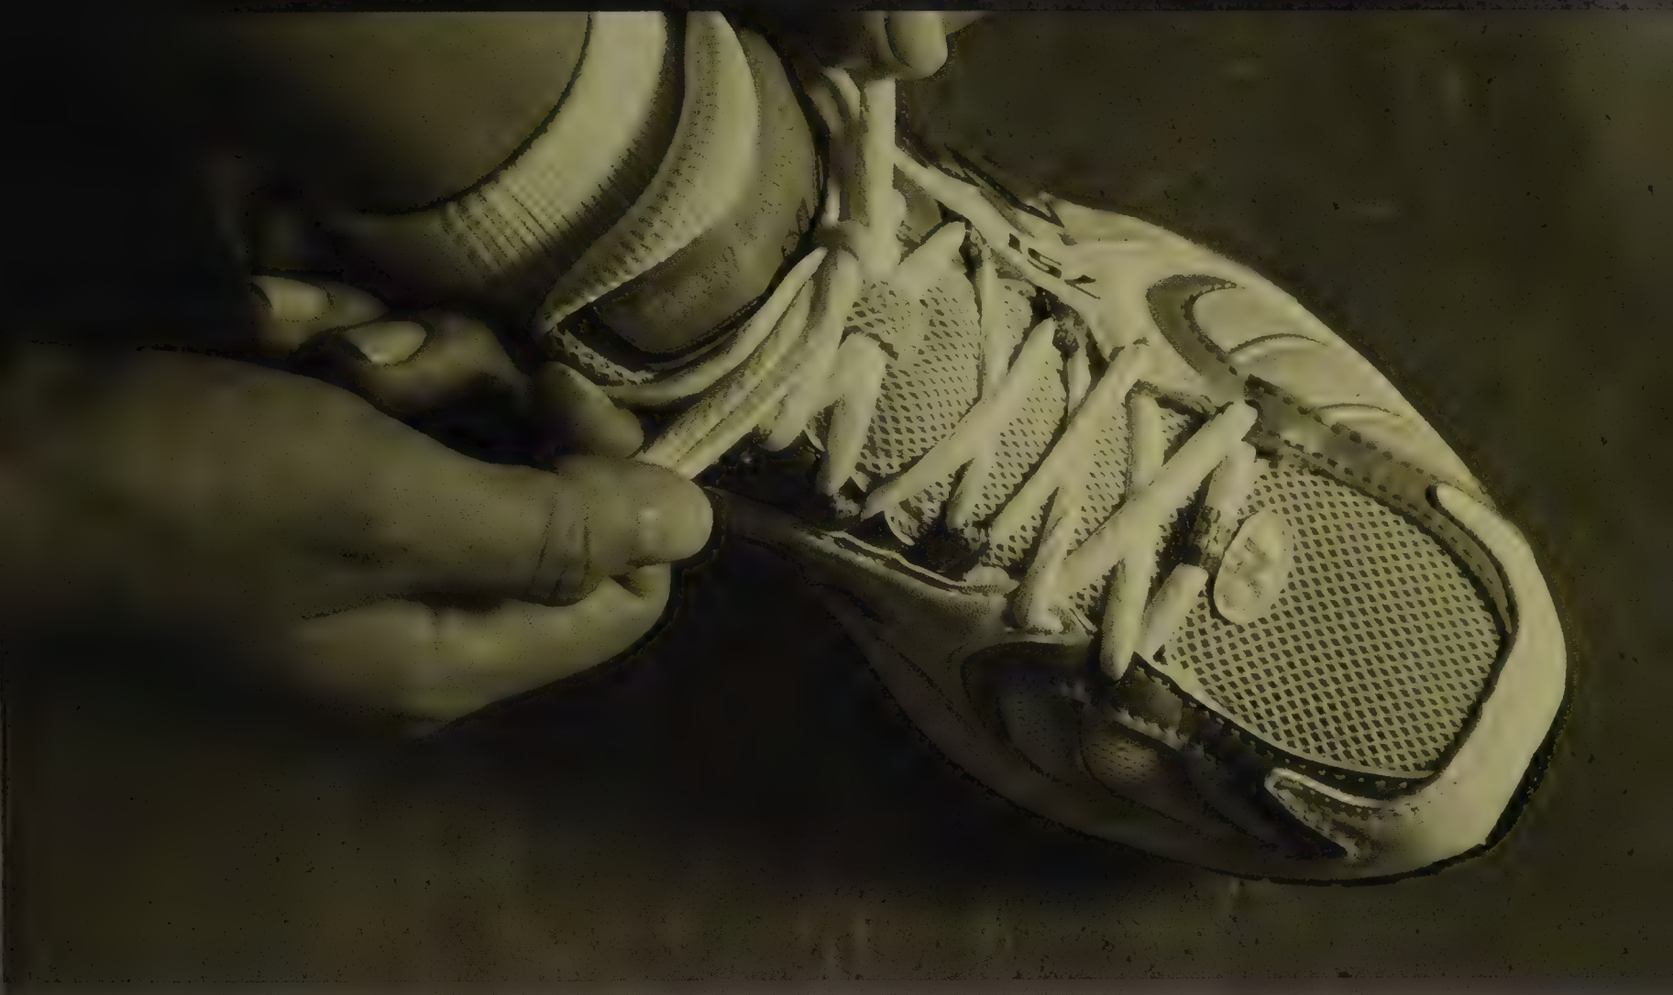
THE MAIN DRAG

Drummer John Drake remembers a show last summer where 300 people came out to see the Main Drag—in Calgary. Apparently someone knew the group from playing Rock Band 2 and told the booker.

"It was word of mouth, like MySpace and iTunes," says Drake, who (conveniently) works for game creator Harmonix, along with other members of the group. "Rock Band has a really powerful reach to where rock bands can't go themselves."

Luckily, the Main Drag gets around—and produces intoxicating indie-pop CDs like this year's You Are Underwater. But the game link can't be ignored. "We were worried about being labeled as just a video-game band," he says. "But who cares why music fans start listening as long as they're listening."



The Main Drag began several years ago as more of a folk-pop outfit, but increasingly developed a synthetic approach with remaining members Drake, bassist Dan Cardinal, singer Matt Boch and fellow multi-instrumentalist Jon Carter. "The process always has been that someone writes a sketch of a full song and people contribute parts to it," Drake says. "And by the time we're finished, it's all chopped and screwed and completely different."

The group is also converting songs into game files to sell as add-on content through the Rock Band Network. So does the band write its musical parts with gamers in mind? "It plays into our creative process," he says, "though it's not the sole driver."

THE TALENTED MR. WOLF

A ROCK ICON REFLECTS ON LIFE IN THE FAST LANE.

BY PAUL ROBICHEAU / ILLUSTRATION BY ANTONY HARE

PETER WOLF CAN UNDERSTAND the genius behind Rob Reiner's rock mockumentary This Is Spinal Tap. But as he watched the comedic film at the Cheri Cinema in 1984, the freshly disposed J. Geils Band frontman found it more and more depressing.

In contrast to the chuckling masses exiting the theater, Wolf recalls, "I see this guy coming out of the other door, and it's Steve Tyler. And he looked at me, and I looked at him, and we both felt like we got hit by a truck, because we had both lived those dynamics. This wasn't funny. This was our life."

A quarter of a decade later, Wolf's life is better ➜ and broader. For one thing, the 64-year-old singer is back with the J. Geils Band, at least for sporadic reunions that include a sold-out Aug. 14 double bill with Aerosmith at Fenway Park.

Revered alongside Tyler as one of the '70s most dynamic showmen—he used to leapfrog stages as a dancing dervish—Wolf still encounters fervent fans around town. "I'm gratified that people enjoy the music," he says, "but the celebrity thing is something I don't spend much time thinking about."

People in today's local music scene know another side of Wolf. For starters, the singer maintains a rich, if more modest, solo career that includes this year's roots-rocking gem Midnight Souvenirs. Before that came 2002's Sleepless, which Rolling Stone named one of the 500 greatest albums of all time.

"He won't ignore the history and what he's done, but he doesn't want to rest on it either," says guitarist Duke Levine, who has played on Wolf's last three albums and tours, and takes a backup role with the Geils Band onstage. "His main focus is growing."

Indeed, Wolf is a legend who doesn't act the part, coming off as more of a Renaissance man than a rock star. In Boston, he's known as a Zen-like scenester who casually cruises the city's clubs, concerts and restaurants in his trademark all-black attire, fedora hat and shades. "It's a Bronx thing," Wolf says of where he grew up. "The rockers wore black."

WOLF WITH THE J. GEILS BAND, 1981

Wolf occasionally sits in with visiting national acts (he's performed at Fenway Park with Bruce Springsteen) and local talent alike, hopping onstage with musician friends like Levine and Dennis Brennan, at places like the Lizard Lounge and Atwood's Tavern. But he also seems to catch every touring act worth seeing—usually as they're just emerging.

"The first thing that got me into music as a performer was that I was a fan," Wolf says, sinking into a couch at the House of Blues' Foundation Room, across from the ballpark where he'll play weeks later. "I don't consider myself a musician, just a music fan."

Speaking over a sound check by Seattle rockers Modest Mouse, Wolf mentions he saw them at the Paradise when they were touring for their first record. "I'm pretty opinionated, or selective I should say, but I'm always open to being moved. So that's the reason I like to go out."

Current bands only scratch the surface. Wolf seems to have personal experience with every prominent musician from the past 50 years. The first concert he ever saw was an Alan Freed bill that boasted Little Richard, Buddy Holly, Chuck Berry and Jerry Lee Lewis. "You get an induction like that, you become baptized into rock 'n' roll immediately," Wolf says. During high school, he walked to the Apollo Theater, where he saw R&B greats James Brown, Dinah Washington and Jackie Wilson. He caught Thelonious Monk, Charles Mingus and John Coltrane in the New York jazz clubs. And he met a fresh-to-town folksinger named Bob Dylan.

During his years in Boston, Wolf went on to develop more personal relationships with Van Morrison, the Rolling Stones, Gram Parsons, Muddy Waters and John Lee Hooker, whose "Serves You Right to Suffer" became a live staple for the Geils Band.

Instead of using the tiny dressing room at Club 47 (now Club Passim), blues greats frequented Wolf's Harvard Square apartment. He says he made the first recording of Morrison performing Astral Weeks on a reel-to-reel deck at Fenway club the Catacombs, but the Irish singer would stop by Wolf's to use the phone.

"My telephone number was Flip 313, so even when Van moved to Woodstock, he'd pass it on, 'Hey, if you're in Boston, call Flip 313,' and I'd get calls from Dr. John and Delaney & Bonnie, Mose Allison. They'd all drop by my place, and it was a cool hang."

Another friend who crashed on that couch was Harvard law student Ray Riepen, who asked Wolf to help him purchase FM station WBCN and convert it to rock in 1968. Wolf didn't have the cash, but he became WBCN's first overnight DJ, the "Wolfa Goofa Mama Toofa."

"I just did it 'cause I loved it, and I could play anything," says Wolf, who soon moved on to focus on the fledgling J. Geils Band. "TV went off at around 12:30 in this town and bars closed everywhere at 1, so people were home. There was nothing going on and once people discovered there was this crazy show on the FM dial, the phones started lighting up, and it started building."

He explains his Zelig-like presence on the music scene by equating it to personal relationships among historic painters. "Think of Matisse, Picasso and Cézanne and all the painters they had interaction with," says Wolf, himself an artist who visited Norman Rockwell as a youth and attended the Museum School of the Fine Arts (filmmaker David Lynch was his roommate). "We consider them sacred, but they were all doing work. And it's the same thing for myself, just coming up as Van Morrison or Dylan were coming up or the Stones were hitting."

Wolf went beyond the music and art worlds with his four-year marriage to actress Faye Dunaway in the late '70s. "Again, that was two people who cared for each other," Wolf says, noting they avoided the media. "It really was nothing to do with celebrity."

Degrees of separation never accumulate much for Wolf. When his assistant Stu Berk takes delight in stumping Wolf to name that band as the Foundation Room's sound system blasts "Time Stand Still," a 1987 hit for Rush, the backing vocal emerges, and it's Aimee Mann, a friend of Wolf's who cowrote two songs on his 1996 CD Long Line. The Geils Band shared '70s bills with Rush, as well as Yes and the Mahavishnu Orchestra—and most any other band that toured that decade.

Oddly, their Fenway show with Aerosmith has been touted as the first time the two Boston institutions have shared a bill. Yet Wolf says he remembers playing with Aerosmith (maybe in New Hampshire) when guitarist Joe Perry had temporarily left the band.

"Everybody has different memories, and it gives you a reflection of the haze that the era had for us all," Wolf says. "I knew Joe [in the early '70s] when they started. I remember him picking me up and taking me to his house, and I met Steven early on."

Things changed when Aerosmith began touring constantly, much like the Geils Band, which had a few years' jump on Aerosmith. "We didn't really have the interaction and Boston didn't have, like London, certain clubs where a lot of musicians hung out," Wolf says. "It was only later that places started to open up."

Despite Aerosmith's turmoil over the years, including Tyler's recent hiatus from the band, Aerosmith has more or less kept a-rolling. The Geils Band folded camp in 1984, a year after asking Wolf to leave over creative differences in the wake of commercial hits "Love Stinks" and "Centerfold."

"Putting together a group is easy, keeping together a group is an art form and a great challenge," Wolf says, quoting his friend Springsteen. "I admire that [Aerosmith] was able to get through a lot of storms and resolve a lot of conflicts and keep it together. Unfortunately, with the Geils Band, that wasn't the case. That's what sort of left me to become a solo artist. It wasn't by choice."

Still, Wolf made the best of it, starting with his 1984 solo debut Lights Out, co-produced by Michael Jonzun of electro-funk group the Jonzun Crew, and including Mick Jagger and guitarists Elliot Easton (the Cars) and Adrian Belew (Talking Heads). A year later, Wolf found himself in Detroit, recording the duet "Push" with Aretha Franklin for her album Who's Zoomin' Who?

In turn, the Geils Band ultimately patched up their differences. The group launched a 13-date reunion tour in 1999 and played several one-off concerts (many of them charity events) in recent years, including last year's opening of the new House of Blues.

"What I enjoy about [Geils] is I get to revisit a body of work that I helped create and was part of my life for 17 years, and people still have the interest," Wolf says, suggesting it's like an actor doing a blockbuster movie rather than an indie film or play. "The performance is a lot more demanding, because you're dealing at a larger scope and the aspect about the Geils Band is we always start at 99 miles per hour and like to keep it there."

WOLF IS A LEGEND WHO DOESN'T ACT THE PART, MORE OF A RENAISSANCE MAN THAN A STAR.

Wolf takes the foot off the gas pedal a bit more with his band the Midnight Travelers, which played the Wilbur Theatre earlier this year and cover more shades of country, folk, soul and R&B. He says he still enjoys the sensibility of a group. And he works from album to album with much of the same cast, from coproducer Kenny White to cowriters Will Jennings (who penned "Tears in Heaven" with Eric Clapton) and Angelo Petraglia (now associated with Kings of Leon) to musicians such as Levine, fellow guitarist Larry Campbell and drummer Shawn Pelton.

"Collaboration works for me," Wolf says. "That's what made music so exciting to me, 'cause painting's such a solitary thing. You [have to be] your own disciplinarian. But when you're working in a group, you're either sharp or flat, on or off. You get together for rehearsals and there's camaraderie.

"For me," he adds, "it's almost like coming into the studio with a screenplay and seeing the play come to life by the actors."

Wolf the fan also peppers his albums with guest singers, and Midnight Souvenirs remains true to form with cameos by Shelby Lynne, Neko Case and Merle Haggard. Wolf and Lynne each took a bottle of bourbon in hand to cut lead track "Tragedy" in an L.A. studio on Wolf's birthday. "It was one of the greatest birthday presents I could ever have," he says. And Wolf has known Case since he "heard this voice" at the Middle East Upstairs and rustled up some food and baklava for her band's long drive.

Then there's Haggard, who Wolf calls "the mountaintop." When the country legend played Boston on a 2007 tour with Willie Nelson and Ray Price, Wolf says they all partied until dawn at his Boston apartment. In turn, Haggard recorded the melancholy "It's Too Late for Me," which closes out Midnight Souvenirs.

"When I first met the Rolling Stones, they were in a hotel room, and Mick and Keith [Richards] were on the floor. It was during the Exile period, or maybe before," Wolf recalls. "They were playing [Haggard's] 'Sing Me Back Home,' and I believe Gram Parsons was there. We were all taken by Merle.

"The aspect about Merle is like Dylan, Van and [Johnny] Cash," he continues. "He's still artistically maturing and still very committed to the integrity that he had in the beginning."

Just like Wolf himself. ×××

Marissa Perry, Broadway's original "Tracy," stars in the production at the Reagle Music Theatre of Greater Boston Aug. 12–22. Kimya Kavehkar

Movies Edited by Nick Altschuller and Amanda Knorr

Capsules by Sean Burns

The A-Team ★ ½ Stupid even by the low standards one must apply to an adaptation of a TV show starring Mr. T, Smokin' Aces director Joe Carnahan's noisy, loutish shoot-'em-up aims to please but merely grates. Slumming Liam Neeson waves a phallic cigar around as the leader of a cocky, covert ops team spending so much time laughing at their own jokes and high-fiving, it's unclear how they get anything else done. You'll want to slap the toothpick out of Bradley Cooper's smarmy smirk. District 9's Sharlto Copley hams it up incessantly as crazy pilot Murdock, and some idiot in casting had the bright idea to let Ultimate Fighter Quinton "Rampage" Jackson quote Gandhi. The action is poorly staged and impossible to follow, and everybody's having such a grand old time that nothing ever feels like it's at stake. The end result is a smug frat party with explosions. (In the suburbs.)

The Concert ★★ ½ Sad-eyed Andrei, once a revered conductor of Russia's Bolshoi Orchestra, is now a disgraced janitor. Thirty years ago he ignored Brezhnev's orders to fire his Jewish musicians, and the ensuing decades haven't been kind. Redemption lurks on the horizon, as one day, while polishing the brass in the Bolshoi director's office, Andrei intercepts an invitation from Paris' Théâtre du Châtelet. It couldn't be that difficult to impersonate an orchestra, right? Why not get the old band back together? Writer/director Radu Mihaileanu skips jauntily over this scenario's implausibilities and piles on the colorful characters and broad stereotypes. There's much discussion of "the Slavic temperament," which in this case is code for drunken boisterousness. Assisted by his bearish, ambulance-driving cellist and a hilarious former KGB stooge, Andrei enlists gypsy fiddlers to forge passports and even persuades a tone-deaf gangster to sponsor the trip. The Concert's pleasures, however minor, come from the old underdog formula, as it's tough not to hope this rag-tag band recaptures lost glory. (At Kendall Square.)

Countdown to Zero ★★ ½ Between economic meltdowns and catastrophic oil spills, it's easy to forget we're also on the brink of nuclear annihilation. I know, nukes are so 1985, and yet Lucy Walker's slick documentary serves as an unpleasant reminder that the sum of all fears wasn't quite laid to rest at the end of the Cold War. In fact, she makes a compelling case that things have actually gotten more dangerous. Combining a cursory Cold War overview with unsettling facts about enriched uranium, the savvily edited Countdown to Zero incorporates man-on-the-street interviews with regular folk who haven't given much thought to nuclear weapons since the days of parachute pants. Walker emphasizes the mass in "mass destruction," including shots of bustling Times Square crowds celebrating New Year's Eve while ominous sound-bytes foretell the apocalypse. Even at 89 minutes, Countdown to Zero can't help repeating itself. Walker makes her points early and often. (At Kendall Square.)

Dinner for Schmucks ★★ Have wacky hair and false teeth ever made a performer more amusing? Or are they just the affectations of performers trying way too hard? Paul Rudd stars as an up-and-coming financial analyst who, after impressing his haughty boss, is invited to a special dinner party with the executive class. The only catch is he's required to bring an idiot that all these rich jerks can mock during the meal. Initially repulsed, the opportunistic Rudd suddenly sees a promotion in his future after accidentally hitting Steve Carell's loudmouth grotesque with his car. Every performance is hideously overscaled in this film, and director Jay Roach's unfortunate tendency to keep the camera within six inches of their faces underlines the strain. There's a pleading quality to Dinner for Schmucks that's the antithesis of funny, as watching talented people ham it up in pore-exposing close-ups inspires more pity than giggles. Why is Roach so hell-bent on turning such talented actors into prop comics? (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Get Him to the Greek ★★ Appearances to the contrary, Nicholas Stoller's follow-up to Forgetting Sarah Marshall is not technically a sequel. For starters, Jonah Hill plays a different character this time around, but the biggest departure is one of tone. You won't find the previous picture's gentle, inclusive spirit on display here. Get Him to the Greek is defiantly unpleasant, aggressive and gross. Sometimes it's amusing, but an icky aftertaste lingers. Hill stars as a schlubby, put-upon record company staffer who spends his days

GAME OVER

Michael Cera leads us on a joyless comic adventure.

Scott Pilgrim vs. the World ★
Starring Michael Cera, Mary Elizabeth Winstead, Kieran Culkin, Chris Evans, Anna Kendrick, Brandon Routh and Jason Schwartzman. Based on the comics by Bryan Lee O'Malley. Screenplay by Michael Bacall and Edgar Wright. Directed by Edgar Wright. At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.

I'M TOO OLD FOR THIS. If comic-convention hype is any indication, a bitter divide is brewing between the youthful partisans of Edgar Wright's Scott Pilgrim vs. the World and we cranky senior citizens born in the 1970s. Some folks will tell you the movie is an instant classic, a hero story expressing fanboy issues of self-loathing and buried esteem in the language of retro video games. Others will simply find it a pandering, sexist sop to man-children awash in a style that substitutes pop-culture references for jokes. I haven't wanted to walk out of a movie this badly since Sex and the City 2, but your personal mileage may vary.

Michael Cera stars and does his Michael Cera thing, which was amusing until he started doing it in every movie. He whimpers lines as the title character, a 20-something loser with no job and no aspirations, playing bass in a lame garage band. Pilgrim is one of the most worthless characters we've seen in film this year, devoid of any life or higher ambition. He's still reeling from a breakup we're told happened "455 days ago," at which point he stopped getting haircuts and started feeling sorry for himself.

But then one night he meets Ramona Flowers (Mary Elizabeth Winstead), who we know is the girl of Pilgrim's dreams because we've seen him having dreams about her. At no point in the film do these two have anything resembling a meaningful conversation, and the most we learn about Ramona is that she changes her hair color on a weekly basis. She regards the world with a bratty, off-putting sneer, but it doesn't matter because she's just the prize at the end of this video game.

And what a game it is, perhaps the most repetitive of the summer. See, in this movie's vaguely defined winterscape, Ramona has a "League of Evil Exes," so if Pilgrim truly wishes to date her, he must first defeat all seven ex-boyfriends (actually six, as there's an ex-girlfriend, too) in relentlessly protracted, CGI fisticuffs with chintzy Atari sound effects.

> Pilgrim is one of the most worthless characters we've seen in film this year.

Based on the comic book by Bryan O'Malley, Scott Pilgrim vs. the World has an intriguing hook. Fighting Ramona's exes is a nifty metaphor to express the uphill battles in any relationship, as initially you're always competing with the memories of those who came before. Alas, director Edgar Wright has little interest in exploring this fertile idea. He's really not interested in anything other than fawning over his target audience with obscure references and endorsing a worldview that can best be described as limited.

Pilgrim is a heel and a bore. Besides Carrie Bradshaw and Bella from Twilight, I'm hard-pressed to think of a protagonist so solipsistic and unappealing. The butt of most gags is Ellen Wong's Knives Chau, an endearing girl who, as far as I can tell, commits the mortal sin of liking Pilgrim and supporting his creative endeavors. But he's busy cheating on her, so obviously she needs to be mocked, humiliated and even beaten as the movie drags to its end.

Weighed down by the need to dispose of seven separate antagonists in numbingly familiar settings, the movie has time for little else. Wright's major feature debut, Shaun of the Dead, nimbly restaged a Nick Hornby relationship drama in the midst of a zombie apocalypse, but his cop-movie follow-up, Hot Fuzz, eventually became the same overlong stunt spectacular it was parodying.

Scott Pilgrim vs. the World is troubling because it pretends to embrace the main character's underdog status, despite most of the movie consisting of him kicking ass and demonstrating a physical prowess that seems incongruous coming from wispy Michael Cera. Wright also tricks out every shot with comic-book nonsense—unable to convey so much as a ringing phone without the word "RING!!!" blasting outward from the receiver.

It's Juno for adolescent boys, reminding a teenage audience at each turn that they're better than everybody else. Of course Scott Pilgrim already has a legion of devoted fans, the whole moral of the movie being that it's OK to be a socially awkward, couch-surfing loser who has nothing to offer the world. There's no coming-of-age here, just an endorsement of something sad.

Meanwhile, I told you kids to get off my lawn! ✖✖✖ absorbing insults from his tyrannical boss (a monstrously funny Diddy) until assigned to babysit his debauched rock 'n' roll idol Aldous Snow (Russell Brand) on a road trip from London to L.A. What follows is a ramshackle collection of increasingly outré set-pieces involving booze, vomit, narcotics and ladies of questionable moral standards. Most scenes seem to feature some object or another being shoved into Hill's rectum, proving once again that anal penetration is comedy's new kick in the balls. (At Somerville Theatre and in the suburbs.)

The Girl Who Played With Fire ★★ This spring's surprise art-house smash The Girl with the Dragon Tattoo didn't do much for me, but I can understand its appeal. Based on the first book of Swede Stieg Larsson's best-selling trilogy, the film spiced up hoary CBS procedural tropes with dashes of tawdry transgression and chic exoticism. It was like an episode of Cold Case, but with subtitles, facial piercings and rape. The Girl Who Played With Fire, alas, is one of those sad sequels that removes everything anyone might've enjoyed in the original. Noomi Rapace's iconic damaged hacker Lisbeth Salander is framed for murder, and only her beloved, beleaguered journalist Mikael Blomkvist believes she's innocent. Cripplingly, the film commits the Jewel of the Nile sequel sin of keeping the two characters we came to see apart for the entire running time. Meager as Dragon Tattoo's pleasures were, the two leads worked well together. This time, not a single word is exchanged between them. Occasional e-mails just don't cut it, chemistry-wise. (At Coolidge Corner, Kendall Square, Stuart Street Playhouse and in the suburbs.)

Grown Ups ★ Last year Adam Sandler gave the bravest, most revealing performance of his career, as a troubled, deeply unlikable comedian in Judd Apatow's underrated Funny People. As happens whenever Sandler ventures outside his comfort zone (Punch-Drunk Love, Spanglish) the audience recoiled, and now we must suffer another lazy retreat back to formula crap. The maudlin, sloppy and shockingly unfunny Grown Ups teams Sandler with pals Kevin James, Chris Rock, David Spade and Rob Schneider as childhood buddies reuniting for a weekend at a New England lake house. There's a screenplay credited to Sandler and Fred Wolf, but it feels more like a collection of pious speeches about old-fashioned family values recited over sappy music cues, while former Saturday Night Live cast members halfheartedly ad-lib and try not to obscure the product placement. The comic's Happy Madison company has produced some slapdash features in the past, but particularly in light of Funny People's brilliance, Grown Ups feels like their lamest effort to date. (At Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

How to Train Your Dragon ★★★ This is an unusually adorable CGI adventure from DreamWorks Animation, best known for the noxious Shrek series. Jay Baruchel voices a stumblebum Viking named Hiccup who aches to befriend dragons instead of slay them. Much to the chagrin of his Hagar the Horrible–looking dad (Gerard Butler, in his first tolerable movie), our young hero spends the bulk of the film cozying up to a moody creature nicknamed Toothless and teaching kids a valuable lesson about kindness conquering aggression. The story is a familiar one, with echoes of Avatar during the vertiginous 3-D flying sequences. But the movie is disarmingly sweet and strikingly well-crafted. Directors Dean DeBlois and Chris Sanders were responsible for Disney's charming 2002 oddity Lilo & Stitch. This one doesn't feel quite as fresh, but it gets the job done with rousing action sequences and a great orchestral score by John Powell. (In the suburbs.)

Tuned In

Guitar Heroes It's like Making the Band, only for the cerebral set. The ICA's "Into the Heart of Music" series delves into the underground scenes in Brazil, Jamaica and Mexico. Three separate documentaries chronicle the lives of courageous musicians, exploring how their struggles impact their successes. Hear their stories, and their sounds, beginning on Aug. 13. Matt Gelfand

Inception ★★★ ½ Ever since his art-house smash Memento, writer/director Christopher Nolan has been obsessed with smashing up the syntax of conventional thrillers. Inception is the kind of pet project that could only happen in the wake of The Dark Knight, as Nolan scored a couple hundred million dollars by helming one of the biggest blockbusters of all time. Inception is an expansive, expensive brain-bender rooted in genre satisfactions; half Solaris, half The Matrix. Leonardo DiCaprio stars as a sullen corporate espionage agent slinking around Kyoto stealing valuable information by infiltrating people's dreams. Cleverly layered, the movie jumbles four separate realities into continuous sequences, as action scenes happen simultaneously across different dimensions but with the same characters. It's a huge movie full of meaty ideas, even when the backbreaking ambition begins to feel like a grind. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

The Kids Are All Right ★★★ ½ Simply delightful. Director/cowriter Lisa Cholodenko's family farce stars Annette Bening and Julianne Moore as lesbian helicopter moms flummoxed by their kids' latching on to their hapless, sperm donor dad. Played with no shortage of comic brilliance by Mark Ruffalo, he's a bare-chested, groovy organic farmer with a hankering for instant gratification and a penchant for phrases like, "Right on." Complications ensue. Gently ribbing certain Whole Foods lifestyle choices that'll be familiar to anybody from California or Cambridge, The Kids Are All Right has a warm, randy spirit, which embraces these characters not in spite of, but because of their imperfections. Moore, in particular, hasn't been allowed to cut loose like this in eons. She's a lost New Age girl trying to get her groove back, while Bening's tightly wound wine aficionado scores all the haymaker put-downs. Cholodenko's last film was 2002's wonderful Laurel Canyon, and Kids hits the same raunchy comedic heights. In Cholodenko's world, middle age is a funny and sexy place to be. (At Boston Common, Kendall Square, Coolidge Corner and in the suburbs.)

Knight and Day ★★ Tom Cruise had a great run. For 20 years he reigned as America's top superstar. But then one day he fired his publicist, jumped on Oprah's couch and revealed himself as an insane cult leader who alienated his fanbase to the point where even my mom doesn't like Jerry Maguire anymore. Now comes Knight and Day, which stars Cruise as some sort of rogue super-spy who falls into bedlam with Cameron Diaz's ditzy blonde civilian, and allegedly hilarious hijinks ensue. The gag here is that Cruise could either be a CIA agent out to save the world, or he could be a deranged madman. What's a girl like Diaz to do when the gun-toting assassin keeps leading her into shootouts at badly photographed Boston locations, all while manically assuring her "I'm handling this"? They're chasing some sort of super-battery, but that doesn't really matter. The real pursuit here is two faded stars working overtime for your affection, just begging you to love them again. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

The Last Airbender ★ How many more chances are we going to give M. Night Shyamalan? For a while, I liked to think of him as a skilled director stuck working for a terrible writer. Alas, the fact that he's self-employed makes it a tough relationship to change. And now I can't even tell you what The Last Airbender is even supposed to be about. Based on an allegedly popular Nickelodeon cartoon, the movie left me baffled during the opening expository crawl. A bunch of kids babble mumbo jumbo with all the commitment of a school play and strike tai-chi poses in front of bad special effects. Working on his first blockbuster gig-for-hire, Shyamalan's authorial signature shines through in the film's commitment to solemn humorlessness and a bizarre decision to shoot entire action sequences within cramped single takes. I avoided the controversial (and reportedly unwatchable) 3-D conversion yet was still shocked at what a drab and ugly film this is, even without it being dimmed by those annoying glasses. (At Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

Salt ★★★ We've come to that point in blockbuster season when simple competence feels like something remarkable. Salt stars Angelina Jolie as a poker-faced CIA analyst outed as a Russian spy by a mouth-breathing defector. Is she or isn't she? It's a question you ponder when studying Jolie's brusque, Sphinx-like performance, as the role slyly takes advantage of her odd, non-human characteristics. What's left is a propulsive 90-minute chase sequence, executed in high style by director Phillip Noyce, There Will be Blood cinematographer Robert Elswit and veteran editor Stuart Baird. A technical marvel, Salt is the rare modern action movie that cares enough to orient the viewer during the excitement, using long Steadicam shots and savvy edits where most filmmakers employ chaotic cross-cutting. The retro charms don't just extend to Russian baddies; the whole movie feels like a relic from another age, as commitment to craft trumps CGI bombast. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Sex and the City 2 ★ "Shoes, money, outfits, shoes, vagina, money, shoes, jewelry, outfits, money, shoes." That's pretty much all I got out of this two-and-a-half-hour barrage of fetishized luxury items, crass behavior and materialism sadly misconstrued as female empowerment. After the redundant, happily-ever-after endings of both the TV program and the first movie, there's no reason for this sequel to exist besides money. So I guess it's fitting that Sex and the City 2 is about how ridiculously freaking rich these people are. Instead of a story, we watch the gals vacationing at a $22,000-a-night Abu Dhabi resort. Little occurs besides costume changes, and the movie periodically stops dead in its tracks for lengthy itemizations of the products on display. It's a cartoon Middle East, where women wear the latest haute couture beneath their burkas and mean, old religious dudes get huffy over Carrie and her entourage tramping around their city with their aging, leathery cleavage hanging out. The worldview is toxic and the excess so wretched that this feels like a Transformers movie for greedy, middle-aged slatterns. (In the suburbs.)

Shrek Forever After ★ ½ I can't believe I've sat through four Shrek movies. The things I do for you people! With its bare-bones animation—the empty backgrounds bearing the distinct stink of a direct-to-DVD sequel—this latest desultory slog attempts to reboot the series by positing an It's a Wonderful Life scenario. Mike Myers' charmless ogre gets fed up with all the burping, farting and pooping by his babies and longs for the more solitary existence of his old, undomesticated life. Dastardly Rumpelstiltskin (voiced by in-house animator Walt Dohrn, allowing you to hear cost-cutting measures in full effect)

Good Composure

shows the titular ogre what life would be like were he never born, sending him off to wander around a blighted, dystopian Far Far Away. Shrek has to meet everybody all over again, an implicit acknowledgment that there's nowhere else to go with these characters except to start the entire series over from scratch. (In the suburbs.)

Toy Story 3 ★★★★ So this year's summer blockbuster for adults turns out to be a contemplation of mortality and obsolescence starring a bunch of animated plastic toys. You might reasonably wonder if we critics ever get bored writing love letters to Pixar, especially when it comes to a long-delayed sequel that on the surface appears to be geared toward audience familiarity and 3-D price-gouging gimmicks. Yet these sons of bitches have done it again. Tom Hanks' cowboy Woody and Tim Allen's career-redeeming Buzz Lightyear find themselves put out to pasture once young Andy heads off to college. They're confined to a shabby daycare center that carries eerie echoes of senior-citizen homes across the land. What follows is a rousing jailbreak adventure with a tragic undertow, tackling serious questions of death and abandonment in a mature manner that would make Ingmar Bergman proud, if only he'd played with dolls. This is a treasure. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

The Twilight Saga: Eclipse ★★ Probably as good as any movie based on a Stephenie Meyer novel can be, Eclipse continues the mopey saga of sparkly vampires, shirtless werewolves and a heroine so vapid that in terms of toxic female characterizations she makes Carrie Bradshaw seem generous and self-aware. The new addition here is directorial competence, something the first two features sorely lacked. Filmmaker David Slade previously helmed the pedophile's nightmare Hard Candy and a very different vampire picture called 30 Days of Night. Also, stuff actually happens this time. There's a rascally pack of newborn vampires tearing up the Pacific Northwest, and the film picks up steam when it strays from the Hot

Topic teen angst and charts an uneasy alliance between the vampires and werewolves against their common enemies. Slade's got visual chops to burn and shoots Robert Pattinson's fey dreamboat Edward and Kristen Stewart's petulant twit Bella in romanticized, wide-screen close-ups. But in the end it's still a Twilight movie, which means queasy sexual politics, rancid dialogue and terrible lead performances. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

CORE CHEMISTRY

Stone Temple Pilots play Bank of America Pavilion on Sept. 1.

Revived rockers Stone Temple Pilots fly past the baggage claims.

STONE TEMPLE PILOTS are back with a big bang, baby, seemingly true-to-form in more ways than one.

On a positive note—with its artful mash of post-grunge hard rock, glam-pop, psychedelia and country—the San Diego band's eponymous new CD doesn't sound like a group that spent half the past decade on the shelf.

"There was just something that undeniably happens when the four of us get into a room to make some music," guitarist Dean DeLeo says from his Malibu home. "I don't know that [the band] ever stopped. We just had to take a break from it."

Of course, there was ample reason for the hiatus. Singer Scott Weiland's documented drug and alcohol abuse led to jail time and cancelled tours as well as inner-band tensions. In turn, Velvet Revolver, his subsequent group with outcasts from Guns N' Roses, cited his "erratic onstage behavior" in giving Weiland the boot.

So where does that leave Stone Temple Pilots as the band roars through a tour slated to hit Bank of America Pavilion on Sept. 1?

A March concert filmed in Chicago and making the rounds on cable shows a fully engaged and charismatic STP, ripping through new tracks "Behind the Lines" and the Southern-flavored "Hickory Dichotomy," as well as '90s hits like "Interstate Love Song," "Plush" and "Vasoline." Yet reports from other cities have been mixed. Bloggers in Milwaukee, Washington, D.C., and Milan have reported that Weiland appeared wasted and out of focus, and forgot lyrics.

DeLeo opts to sidestep the issue. "I always want to be the best that I can be, and I want the band to be the best it can be," he says. The guitarist offers that Milan was a hot, packed room on the last night of the European tour and that "Scott had us all cracking up," as he tried to pass off the band as Italian. That wasn't so hard with DeLeo and his bassist brother Robert, but Weiland added vowels to his and drummer Eric Kretz's last names.

As for the upcoming Boston show, New Jersey native DeLeo adds, "To get into the Northeast, the most rabid, crazed fans on the planet, it's the absolute best.... This is a reciprocal party we're having, man. It's your party. We're just out there working for you. If you make us feel good, we're gonna let it all hang out."

DeLeo says Weiland even nixed the guitarist's proposal that STP hire a utility player to provide keyboards, extra guitar and vocal layers in concert. "I would like to venture off into other material that is more 'studio-friendly,' and Scott's completely against it," DeLeo says. "He's just like, 'No, it's not us, man. I just want the four of us up there making a racket.' I'm like, 'OK man, I respect that. I dig it.'"

Indeed, STP fills the bill as a classic four-piece rock band that thrives on big riffs. "I can always go back to Zeppelin, man, the way God meant it to be: guitar, bass and drums, and a singer," DeLeo says, noting how Led Zeppelin's Jimmy Page "had so much going on at the guitar end of things, it was always interesting to see what line he was going to grab [live]. There's something challenging about that, and there's also something very stripped down and honest about it."

DeLeo's influences range from classic rock to Brazilian music, which fueled two recent B-sides, "Samba Nova" and "About a Fool." "It just goes back to what we were fed as babies," the 44-year-old guitarist says, noting he and Robert would hear the Brazilian greats João Gilberto and Antonio Carlos Jobim played around the house. "I had the luxury of growing up in the '60s and '70s, and what we called popular music and what people are calling R&B now, give me a break. It's a pile of shit today."

The DeLeo brothers produced the new album, working in both Kretz's custom-made studio and Robert's just-finished one. Weiland, meanwhile, recorded vocals at his own studio with producer Don Was, who served as liaison to the sessions.

"Scott insisted back to [STP's 1992 debut] Core, 'I don't want anybody around when I'm doing vocals,'" says DeLeo, who adds that he feels quite similarly as a guitarist when it comes to "trying to let my freak flag fly" with other musicians in the room.

STP has a proven process and chemistry, and they roll with it. ✖✖✖

Wax On

Branching Out

See their encaustics, incorporating leaves and other objects, in Preserve at 13Forest Gallery through Aug. 13. Laura Zarougian

TALES FROM THE VINEYARD

Brokeback Island

Fourth of July on Martha's Vineyard. You do your patriotic duty by grilling and eating too many hamburgers and hot dogs. Then you vacillate with your boyfriend over whether or not to walk down the street to a neighbor's annual Independence Day extravaganza.

The pros are that you'll see all your friends from the island. The cons are that you just saw all of them two days ago, at a cocktail party on the beach. Plus, there's blueberry pie and ice cream urging you to stay home. Still, you get dressed, swearing to go for only an hour.

At this point it probably makes sense to point out that when we first met, the wallpaper on my boyfriend's cellphone was a photo of Jake Gyllenhaal. Sam has made it clear that he would leave me in a New York second if the actor ever showed any real-life inclination toward homosexuality.

So you arrive at the party, where there are any number of familiar faces: Up-Island eminences like Alan Dershowitz, pioneers in their field like fertility expert Merle Berger, Boston socialites like Bob "Dunkin Donuts" Rosenberg and Mary Woolfson, A-listers like Seth and Megan Woods, several Wall Street supernovae and a few nouveau types just thrilled to be part of the in-crowd.

In the kitchen, you bump into your cousin's wife, and together, you make your way through the house, to the deck, noticing, along the way, that Jake Gyllenhaal and his sister, Maggie, are in the dining room. It's so crowded that there's no cool way to tell your boyfriend this without risk of hysterics or hyperventilating. So you hold your tongue, and he eventually excuses himself to use the bathroom. He's gone a while, and in the meantime, the fireworks (on which your neighbor must've spent a fortune) begin. When your boyfriend finally returns, he has a glazed, postcoital look on his face. He pulls you to the bar, where he explains that he was sandwiched between Jake and Maggie while watching the fireworks. He can now die happy.

Fast-forward 10 days, and you're lazing on the clothing-optional beach up by the Cliffs in Gay Head. Maggie walks by, looking hot in a red bikini. So your boyfriend can now say he watched the Fourth of July fireworks with Jake Gyllenhaal, but you can say you've been naked with his sister.

Hysterical Society

It's amazing how being on a small island magnifies things you wouldn't otherwise notice.

Charlayne Hunter-Gault at the Martha's Vineyard Museum gala

Charla Jones at the Martha's Vineyard Museum gala

Melissa Clay at the Martha's Vineyard Museum gala

Molly Cook at the Martha's Vineyard Museum gala

Mystery pants

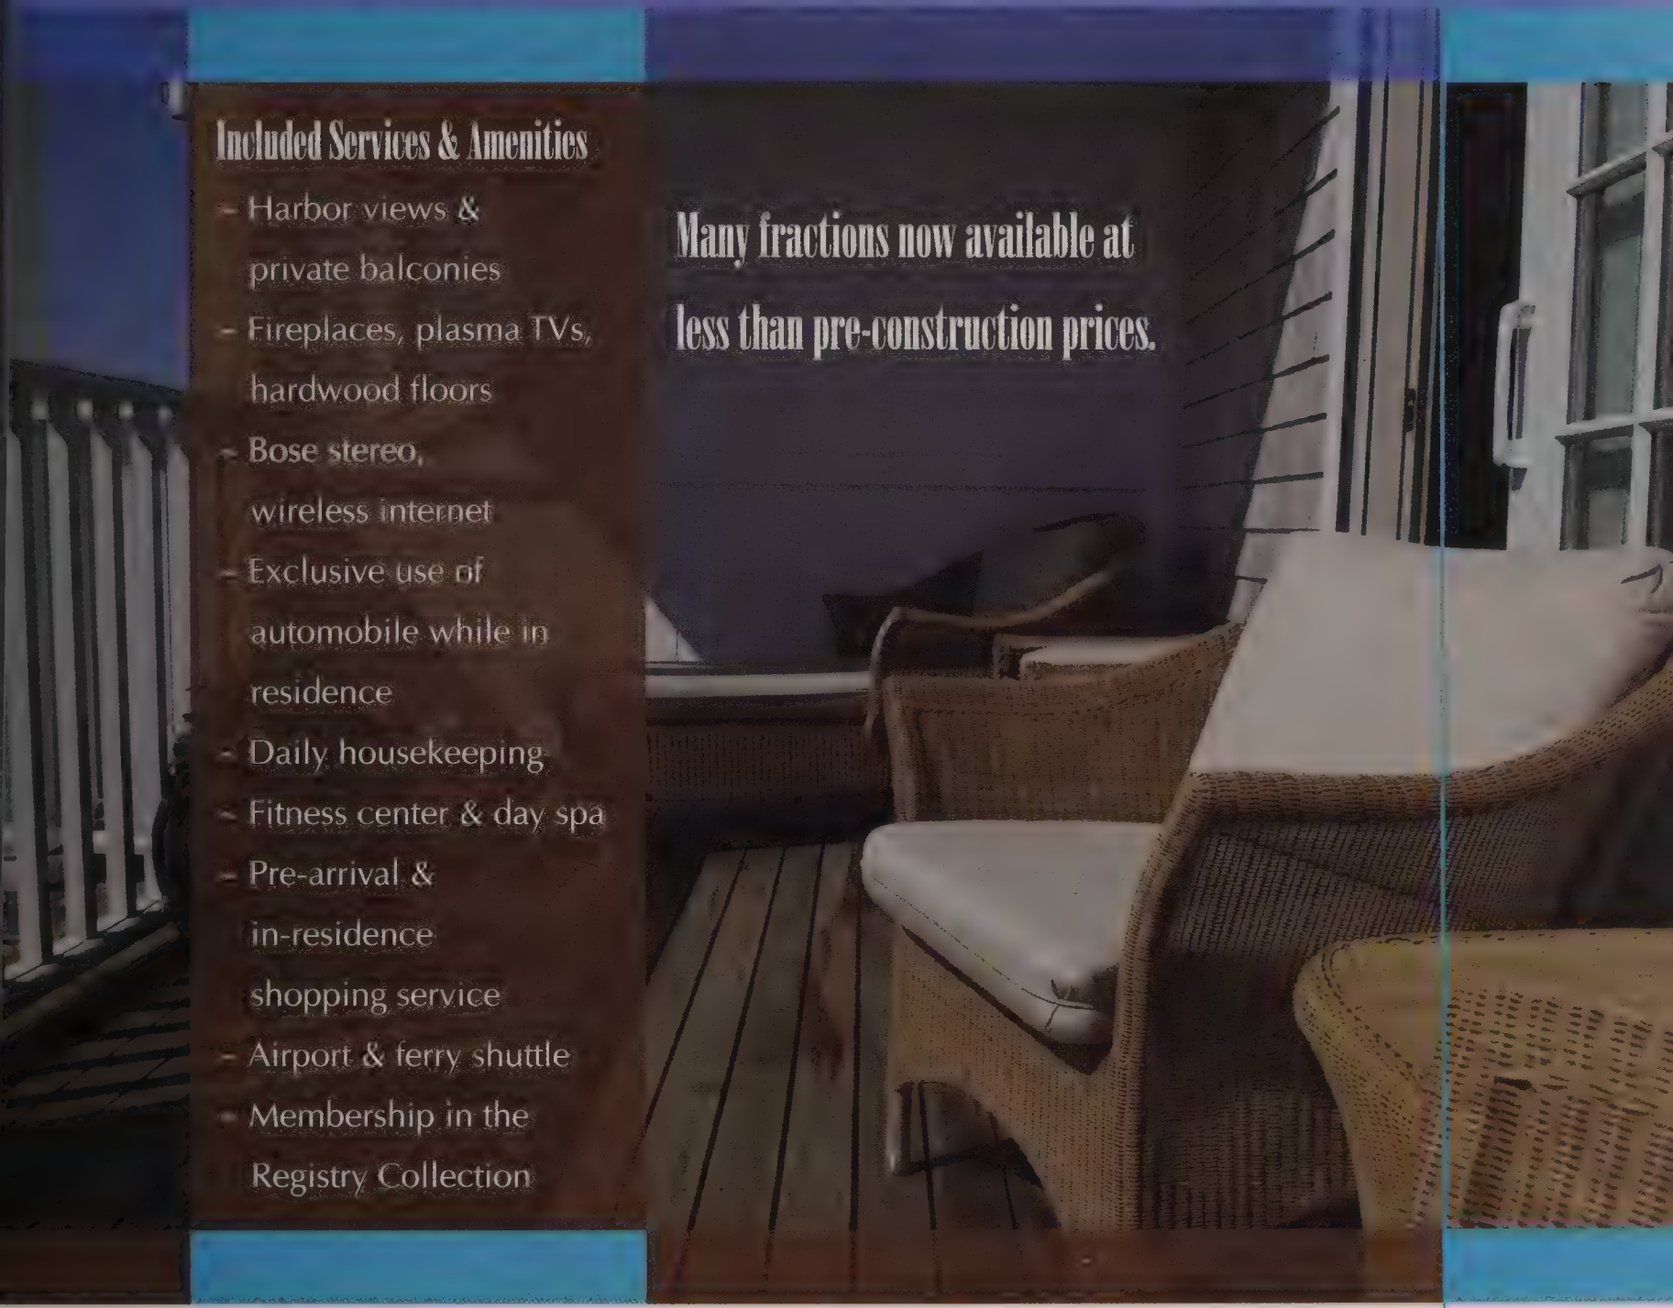
Take the Martha's Vineyard Museum, which chose to honor the island's contributions to World War II at its annual gala, held at Tower Hill, the house on Edgartown Harbor run by the Vose Family Trust.

For example: Who'd have guessed that of the 22 veterans recognized, 14 were still alive, or that one helped liberate Buchenwald, while another was a classmate of Anne Frank's?

The gala, held under a tent P.T. Barnum would've been proud of, attracted the elite likes of journalistic superstars Charles and Charlayne Hunter-Gault, historian David McCullough, goddess Charla Jones, Hollywood bigshots Amy and Andy Heyward (who has 400 pairs of glasses that he matches to every outfit), lovely Wampanoag Berta Giles, the world's chicest nonagenarian, Molly Cook, auctioneer Karen Keane, Beacon Hill power couple Tim and Ellen Guiney, a man in full-dress uniform, a woman inexplicably dressed like a stewardess and a particularly low-key ICA trustee who said, "Even though we're not sitting at the same table, I'm sure you'll be laughing at the same things we are."

Regarding the social Olympics of Martha's Vineyard, one guest said, "People here answer every question by telling you exactly how long they're here for and how many years they've been coming to the island. I asked one man something about his work, and he said, 'Well, we're here for four months of the year, you know.'"

Monthly Contest



Go-to-hell pants—those trousers that are usually lime green or brick red and embroidered with lobsters or pheasants or tennis rackets—are a summer perennial among preppy Wasps and those who wish to be mistaken for them. Sometimes, they're a seizure-inducing Lily Pulitzer print, or four clashing panels of Madras, but no matter what, they all send the same message: "I don't care if my outfit makes your eyes bleed."

It turns out there's a subtler, slightly less aggressive variation, which we'll call "You're Cordially Invited to Screw Yourself" pants. The finest example I've seen of these is the Mylanta-colored khakis pictured here. It takes a confident guy to carry off pants the shade of an antacid, and the first reader to correctly guess the identity of their owner will win an Improper Bostonian T-shirt, which doesn't so much scream, "Go to Hell!" as, "Order Me a Drink When You Get There!" ×××

WE SEE BURRITOS DIFFERENTLY.

That's why we serve the same steak that you would find at a fine restaurant. Only at Chipotle you don't need to decide which fork to use first.

At Chipotle, 85% of the beef we buy is responsibly raised, without added hormones and antibiotics. And we are working every day to increase that amount to 100%. The really big idea behind Chipotle is to serve Food With Integrity. Food that's grown with respect for the animals, the farmers and the environment. It's great tasting food that's so gourmet we could serve it with a silver place setting, but we know you'll enjoy it even more if you eat it with your hands.

Seasonal Change

As a girl, I knew summer had reached intermission when my mom treated me to the Red Apple. The small shop brought in its back-to-school clothes around August and, for an afternoon, I'd swap swimsuit for stirrups, thrilled to try the trends. My sister smartly protested, given the weather, and parked herself in the closet, an audience to my fashion show. Then my outfits (I got three) would hang in the closet for a month as the Virginia humidity waned and, eventually, dried out to fall.

And so it continues as an adult. Just back from the Outer Banks, I sped through Saks on my way to Shaw's only to discover the tide of fashion had changed in my absence. I scanned the racks for the season's styles, wondering what would work for me. Leopard, military, minimalism, opulence, prepster… perhaps woodsy? Obviously, I'll pick and choose among the options (featured in this issue of the magazine), an approach that eluded my younger self. So long, bodysuits… with vests… and padded bras.

PATCHWORK

IN PARIS Don Carney and John Ross, owners of Patch NYC, were inspired by the little storefronts serving as retail annexes to artists' studios. "It's the opposite of Newbury Street, more of an artistic space," says Carney, 42, of the new boutique under their South End studio. "It's unexpected and very small, kind of a step back in time." They stock both one-of-a-kind pieces and costume jewelry, as well as original drawings, scarves and candles. "Hopefully, it'll be a treasure to someone." ANDREW RIMAS

Tea Time

Burma takes it tea seriously, but not so much as a brewed hot beverage. Instead, the leaves are steeped in pickling brine and tossed into a refreshing cold salad called laphet thote. At YoMa—Boston's lone taste of the region just off the Brighton Ave. dining strip—the dish arrives deconstructed, as per tradition, with the pile of sour leaves surrounded by chopped tomato, shredded cabbage, hot chile, and a crunchy trio of roasted peanuts, sesame seeds and fried yellow peas.

Wine

CIN CIN

Stunning white wines—made from heirloom grape varieties throughout Italy's 20 regions—rank among the best-kept secrets in the world. The country responsible for the spread of the vine in Europe has long-enjoyed renown as a producer of reds. In the last several decades, however, dedicated growers have given us a wealth of dry, aromatic, beautifully balanced whites. Here are three of my recent favorites.

MASTER OF WINE SANDY BLOCK IS VICE PRESIDENT OF BEVERAGE OPERATIONS FOR

Terredora di Paolo Falanghina Irpinia, 2009 ($17, The Wine Bottega, Boston). This has become my go-to white in restaurants. I regularly order the crowd-pleaser, and my guests are never disappointed. Falanghina hails from Campania and makes a flower-scented, fresh, yeasty wine with creamy textures and a hint of nutlike earthiness in the finish. Most examples you'll find are very good, but this is outstanding: more spice, more elegance, more layers of flavor. Soft and delicious, enjoy it with seared scallops.

Bucci Verdicchio dei Castelli di Jesi Classico Superiore Marches, 2008 ($20, Bauer Wine, Boston). From the Marches region, the verdicchio grape generally produces a fresh, brightly acidic wine that works with raw clams. The Bucci Classico is much more, featuring a wealth of lush, mellow, mineral-accented citric fruit that's understated but beautifully expressive. Produced from organically grown vines, this medium-bodied, bone-dry white provides a zesty backdrop to sautéed shrimp.

Pieropan "La Rocca" Soave Classico Veneto, 2007 ($45, Federal Wine & Spirits, Boston). If you think of soave as a cheap, nondescript white, this one just might blow your mind. Made by Leonildo Pieropan, the acknowledged master of this hilly region in the Veneto, La Rocca is a single-vineyard, terroir-expressive wine. It's a barrel-aged stunner that's very dry but attains a honeyed, smoky super-ripeness that makes it irresistible with simply grilled sea bass or trout.

Marco Suarez out on a ledge

ALL-NATURAL
His rooftop garden

MARCO SUAREZ says it's not just about the patio anymore at Ledge Kitchen and Drinks in Dorchester. Since Suarez came on board as executive chef in June, after establishing Jamaica Plain's Bon Savor as one of Boston's best neighborhood restaurants, he's made some big changes.

"We've gone to all-scratch, making our own BBQ sauce, smoking our own chickens," he says. The kitchen "is run more like a brigade, with sous chefs instead of kitchen managers. It's the only way I know how to cook."

You may have heard about his enormous rooftop garden, which he calls "a huge step in the right direction," but be assured that it "doesn't mean fine dining" in style or cost. What it means is " a ton of crazy specials, like watermelon blossoms. I picked 10 pounds of squash blossoms today, and brought crates to Jamie Bissonnette at Coppa and Seth Morrison at the Gallows." .

FIRING ON ALL CYLINDERS of what's trendy, Bull BBQ will open in the Galeria building in Harvard Square by the end of September. Each table has a built-in grill, and the menu will focus on various cuts of beef (pork, poultry, seafood and vegetarian options will also be served).

REJOICE! Clover Food Lab is opening a stationary storefront in Harvard Square at Holyoke Center. According to its website, the demolition/construction process is under way.

No Shame In It

If Leopold Bloom had lived in New England, September is the month that would've made him blush. For a few brief weeks, farms like Cider Hill in Amesbury are ripe with not only shamefaced peaches, but also early-season apples and the second swing of raspberries. It's a convergence of crops that makes for a bountiful day of fruit-picking—and a good bit of snacking, sauce-making and pie-baking (or frying, for those true gluttons) in the weeks that follow. Don't leave without a jug of fresh-pressed cider and a hot donut.

Going Out

Mass Appeal

Multiplicity is a great way to defy convention. It keeps people from pinning you down.

"We're not saying we're a tavern. We're not saying we're a gastropub. There [are] no rules here," says Back Bay Social Club chef Tim Raines. "I'm trying to embrace that and have fun."

The 26-year-old's menu stretches from breakfast to late-night, seven days a week, and with the profusion of options, BBSC both validates predictions and provides some surprises. You would expect to find a "locally foraged" mushroom and goat-cheese tart ($12), but you wouldn't think of Boylston as the place to grab a fried-egg sandwich on the way to the office ($8-$11). There are daily specials, and, surprise, Monday's is chicken and waffles ($14), but Friday's is a fish fry (market price), which feels more backwoods then Back Bay.

As for drinks, there's Tom Mastricola, whose work history includes the opening of No. 9 Park's illustrious bar program. At brunch, he'd be pleased to pour you a maple-bacon Bloody Mary ($11), but be sure to ask him about the house-made coffee liqueur for the White Russians ($12). Of course, there are craft cocktails, but Mastricola has tackled an atypical era, highlighting creations from the late '60s and early '70s, like the brandy and white crème de menthe Stinger ($12) or a prosecco-ed variation on the Harvey Wallbanger ($12).

At BBSC, all the buzzwords are present, they're just part of a larger body of work. "There was no intention to say, 'This is local; this is native,'" Raines explains. "We just tried to make it the best."

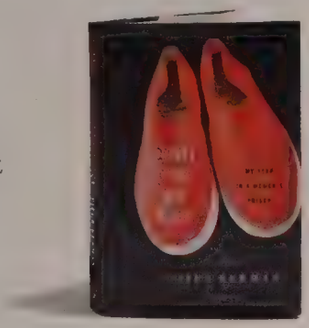
Mopsy {MOPSY STRANGE KENNEDY}



FROM COLLEGE TO CLINK

A Smith grad goes to jail.

FOLLOWING AN UNLIKELY segue of venues, Piper Kerman graduated from Smith College, got involved in international drug trafficking and, a decade later, went to prison. Kerman's sapphic school days found her under the witchy spell of drug-smuggling Nora, who "looked a bit like a French bulldog, or maybe a white Eartha Kitt," becoming her boss and lover. But later Nora ratted her out, sending Kerman into Danbury Prison's dorm scene, teeming with colorful prisoners—vulnerable and the ghetto-tough, young mothers and jailbird grandmas.

With her sharp eye and hip wit, Kerman gives us dialogue-delicious characters who enact their battles and loyalties, bond together against the punitive guards and fear the terrifying slide into solitary confinement, often mandated arbitrarily. Breezily resilient, a hard-working electrician and a dedicated runner, she's a model prisoner with a B.A. who's "inside" for only 15 months. She also has Larry, her fiancé, who visits faithfully, along with family and friends. Kerman is observant, highly descriptive and develops genuine relationships with prisoners less lucky than herself. Later she's airlifted, shackled and at gunpoint, to another jail temporarily—an absolutely terrifying hellhole. And there she meets Nora again, with interestingly nuanced resolutions. ✖✖✖

Orange Is the New Black
By Piper Kerman

Kerman grew up in Boston.

FROM PAGE 100: "At Smith College the pervasive obsession with food was expressed at candlelight dinners and at Friday-afternoon faculty teas; in Danbury it was via microwave cooking and stolen food. In many ways I was more prepared to live in close quarters with a bunch of women than some of my fellow prisoners, who were driven crazy by communal female living. There was less bulimia and more fights than I had known as an undergrad, but the same feminine ethos was present—empathetic camaraderie and bawdy humor on good days, and histrionic dramas coupled with meddling, malicious gossip on bad days."

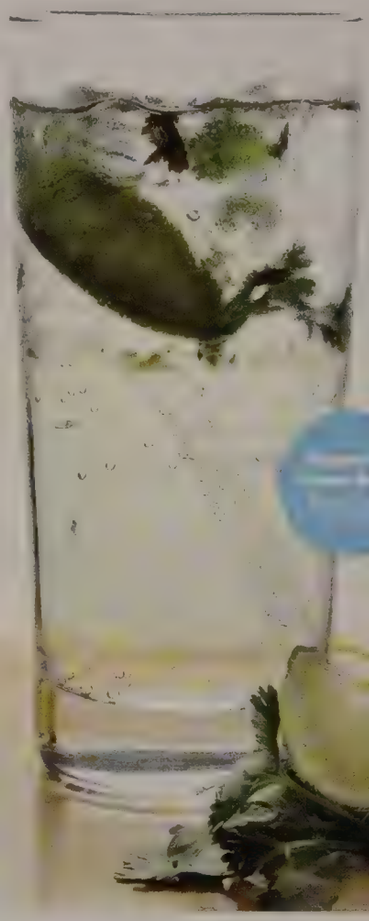
Drink of the Moment



A Pop Sensation

A different kind of bubbly is gaining attention at the bar, as commitment to craft has found an unexpected application. Non-alcoholic, no less.

Once overlooked by the evangelists of local and homemade, sodas are now getting the scratch treatment. "We do everything in-house, as much as we can," East by Northeast chef/owner Phillip Tang says. "To go out and buy cans of Coke or Sprite just seemed wrong."

By steeping natural ingredients in simple syrup, Tang makes the base for flavors like ginger and mint oolong (all $5). Cilantro-lime soda is an herbal, effervescent pick-me-up, and a refreshing alternative to summer's muddled or blended depressants.

Tang was inspired by a lemon-thyme soda he tried at Jean-Georges Vongerichten's Perry St. in Manhattan. "Jean-Georges started playing around with the idea of fresh herbs in sodas at his namesake restaurant in the Trump Tower, and they're served at his locations around the world now," Chris Damskey explains. The Market chef de cuisine helps create flavors like sour orange, cherry-yuzu and ginger ($4), which requires two pounds of the root for one quart of syrup. "These aren't things you can just go down to the corner and buy."

Other establishments dabbling in fizz include Woodward and Myers + Chang, with flavors like passion spice, lychee and vanilla, and aloe and yuzu (all $5). Of course, while noble on their own, they can also serve as a superior mixer, like in Towne Stove and Spirits' Baja Breeze ($10-$12) with Asian citrus soda, or Tang's cilantro lime with Hendrick's gin ($9).

"House-made is a big word right now," he says. "When people see it, it kind of elevates their experience."

NICK ALTSCHULLER

"HOUSE-MADE IS A BIG WORD RIGHT NOW."

Beauty

Glossed Over

The smoky eye stays in style this fall, but you can change it up by going glossy. Shiny lids make your eyes pop and work perfectly for a night out. "The great thing about this look is if it gets runny, you just go with it," says Mariolga Pantazopoulos, a makeup artist with Team Artist Representative. "It should look like it melted into your skin. It looks dreamy."

Step 1: Apply a cream-based eye shadow to your lids. You can also use a powder eye-shadow with shimmer, by wetting a brush and touching it to the product. Gold, bronze or purple hues work well.

Step 2: Dab a drop of gloss (try Crème Brilliance by M.A.C.) at the middle of the highest point on your eyelid. Rub it back and forth without touching the edges, since it'll travel a little.

Step 3: Use loads of mascara on your top lashes. You don't need eyeliner. All the attention should be on the lid, so no need for products under the eyes.

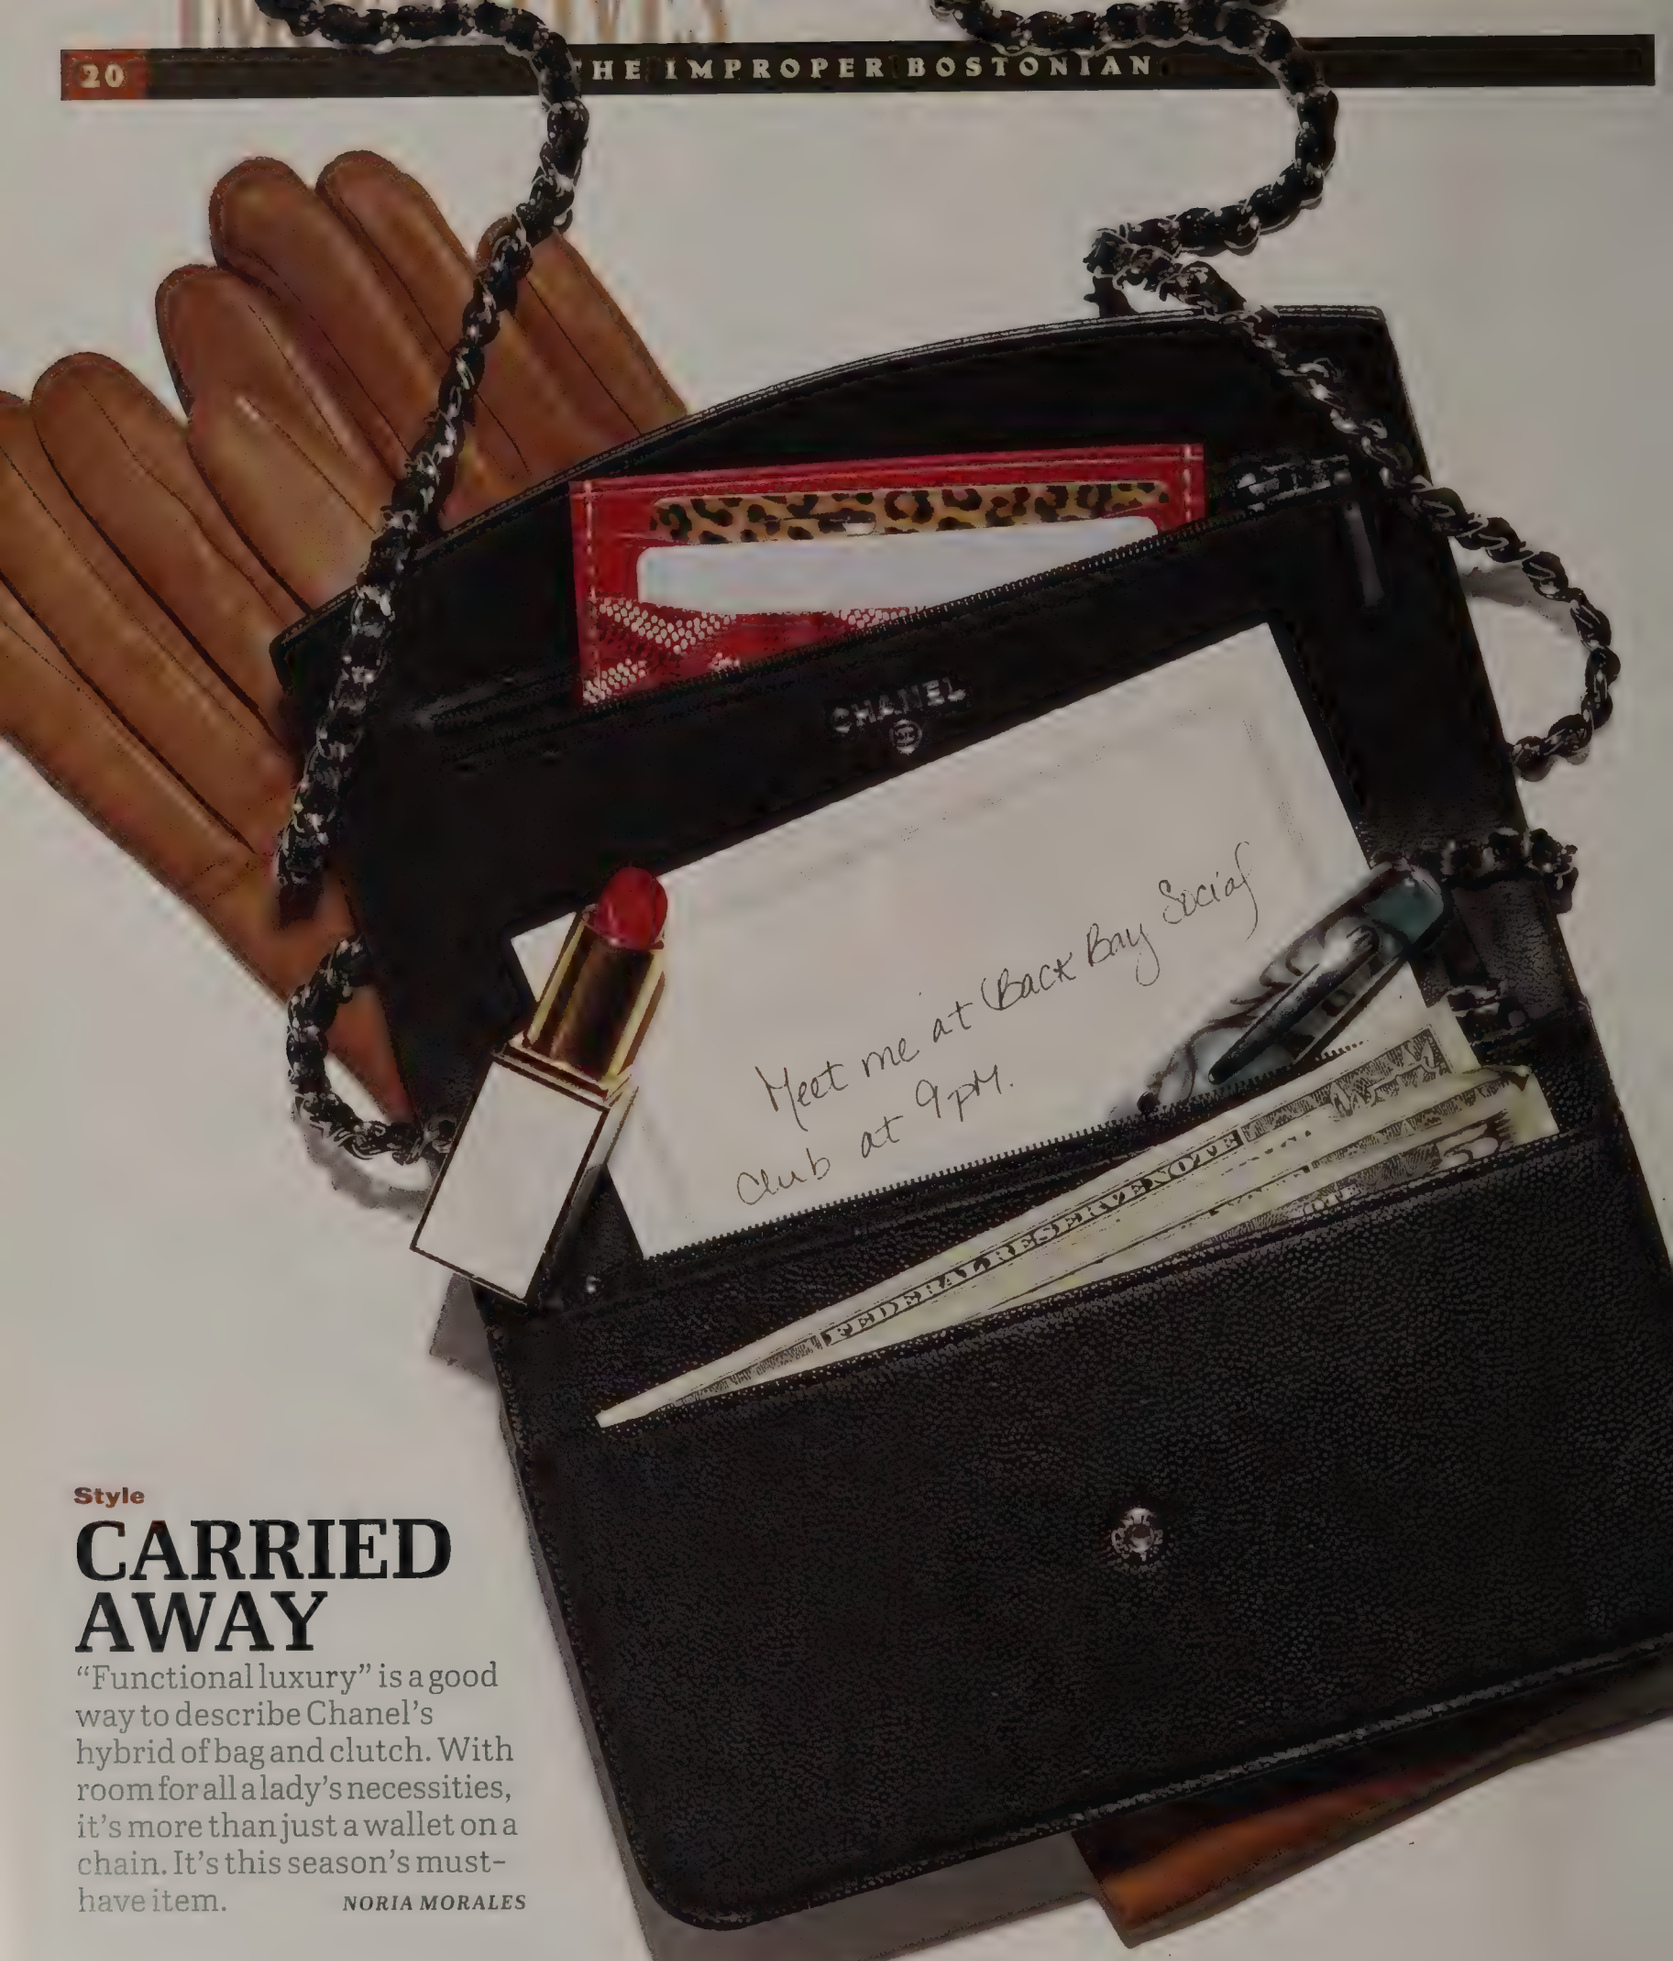
AMANDA KNORR

Impersonals TOTAL TRASH

TO THE GUY PASSED OUT AT NATALIE'S PIZZA AT 2:30 AM:

I was there when your friends left you on that bench, snoring, covered in empty pizza boxes and used paper plates. I knew exactly what I wanted to tell you: You should consider making new friends. But, alas, you were asleep and covered in trash, so my advice was a lost cause. Although they were generous enough to accompany you on a late-night snack run after what was clearly a fun time, you don't have nice friends, and you may also have a drinking problem. Concerned patron

Dear man at the fish counter:



I appreciate the fact that you took great care to pick out a quality piece of salmon for me, but I found your additional comments that I am "a very beautiful lady," albeit flattering, slightly unwarranted. It only made it awkward for both of us when I came back the next week for my scallops. I hope we can move past this; a good start would be for you to keep your eyes on something more appropriate, like the fish. Just a customer

To the elderly lady who lives on my street:

I don't think you know this, but I don't speak Portuguese. In fact, I have no idea what you've been saying for the past three months. I know I always nod and grin and throw in an "obrigada" here or there, but in all honesty, I'm utterly clueless. Nonetheless, I love stopping by your garden on hot afternoons and sampling your fresh herbs and cherry tomatoes. I want to thank you for your kindness, but I'm too shy to tell you that I only speak English. Lost in translation

HIP ARRAY

Basho's colorful presentations please the senses.

BASHO JAPANESE BRASSERIE, a culinary kaleidoscope designed to stimulate and delight, has arrived on the Fenway scene. I say kaleidoscope because of the sheer variety of its preparations and the Japanese aesthetic flair for arranging colors, shapes, tastes and textures in winsome combinations and configurations.

The rainbow roll ($12.95), one of two-dozen "signature rolls," charmed the eye with its polychromatic array of shrimp, salmon, tuna, crab stick, white fish, avocado, tobiko and spicy mayo. The marvelous contrasting yet compatible tastes and textures gratified the senses. The tiger roll ($13.95)—eel, torched squid, smoked salmon, cucumber and salmon roe—achieved equal success.

Basho's sashimi sampler—a delicious and incredible value served from 3:30 to 6:30 pm for $5.95—brought five large slices of pristine salmon, tuna and yellowtail handsomely presented with a threadlike julienne of fresh radish, yellow ginger and lemon. The "Basho flavored" sushi tasting ($18) continued the parade of presentation triumphs. Starting with a California roll (crab stick, avocado and cucumber), the chefs adorned each of six pieces with a different fish and sauce: cured saba with mushroom and apple-mustard soy; fluke with shiso and yuzu; salmon with tomato, shallot and jalapeño aioli; toasted eel with tamari soy and avocado; yellowtail with yuzu, and tuna with tofu puree. The only problem with this dish was that after tasting a segment I wanted the entire roll.

FRESH CUTS Spend a happy hour with the sashimi sampler.

As for cooked items, Basho's robata grill uses lava rocks and precise food positioning to produce tender meats, seafood and vegetables. We tried skewers (two per order) of chicken thighs seasoned with Japanese seven spice ($3.50); pork belly with asparagus and ancho aioli ($4.75); succulent Kobe beef ($6.75); shrimp with miso ($6); scallop with mentaiko aioli ($6.50), and trumpet royal mushroom ($3.25). All were crowd-pleasers that didn't last long among our hungry gang. On the other hand, Basho's tempura—except for the shrimp—generated catcalls. Large cuts of cauliflower, broccoli and zucchini, seemingly too crowded in an insufficiently hot fryer, became heavy, greasy, ponderous hunks.

Among main courses, I tried the tonkatsu at lunch ($8.95). A hefty, reasonably moist slab of tender pork loin deep fried to a crisp, golden turn in a thick panko crust, it came closer to its Japanese exemplar than any other version I've tried in the U.S. Still, our cultural aversion to serving pork rare prevented it from better emulating its super-succulent Japanese cousin.

Justifying its brasserie claim, Basho offered a number of first-rate desserts, most notably banana tempura with a heavenly texture and sweetness, and a splendid bittersweet-chocolate lava cake with vanilla ice cream and an apricot-and-raspberry sauce (both $7.95). Sapporos ($8, 22-ounce) and Kimoto sake by the carafe ($34) covered the beverage front for me, although Basho does have a full bar and wine list. Service was friendly, reasonably attentive and informed.

Basho's interior features a variety of dining venues—a main dining room, two alcoves for private parties, a sushi bar, a wet bar and a lounge—with clean, modern lines, unexpectedly comfortable molded chairs and barstools, and green booths and banquettes. In the lounge, five large flat-screen TVs display the obligatory sports contests.

Filling the almost 250 seats in this upper-Boylston stretch presents a challenge. The draw of the home team will help in the summer, and the increasing number of eateries—ranging from Jerry Remy's mammoth emporium down the street to Petit Robert Bistro in Kenmore Square—may turn Fenway into a dining destination beyond baseball season. Basho could be a significant part of that scene. If it were located between the Back Bay and the South End, like its sibling Douzo, success would be a home run. Where it stands, at the very least, Basho needs some glittering signage to match the vibrancy of the cuisine. ✖✖✖

OUT AND ABOUT

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's annual summer season at Tanglewood kicked off on July 9. The opening-night party also celebrated the 70th anniversary of both the Tanglewood Music Center and the orchestra's school. Dinner was served under a tent to 400 guests, and the event raised $385,000 to support the BSO.

The Courageous Sailing Center's 14th annual Make-a-Mark Celebration took place on July 15 at the Charlestown Navy Yard's Pier 4. Some 400 people attended the event, raising more than $100,000 to benefit the Summer Youth Program, which teaches kids how to sail in Boston Harbor.

A LEADER IN THE HOSPITALITY INDUSTRY

Ez Sez { EZRA DYER }

WHAT'S IN A NAME?

Ezra's baby gets a moniker.

HEATHER AND I RECENTLY had a baby. More precisely, she had a baby. I was present in the hospital room, but the fact is, eating pizza and drinking beer isn't the same as giving birth. This is why I refuse to ever use the phrase "we're pregnant." We didn't each have half a baby that somehow merged into a person when we bumped our fists together like the Wonder Twins. Hey, if "we" were pregnant, then someone would've thought to offer me some painkillers in the delivery room. I have very strong empathy, you know.

Immediately after the baby's month-early grand debut, we were faced with a problem: deciding what to call him. We figured we had time to figure that out, but of course, that notion was dashed by our super-baby's mere eight-month gestation. So they wrote "Baby Boy Dyer" on his hospital wrist bracelet. I kind of liked that one, actually. Baby Boy Dyer sounds like he'd travel the country, hustling chumps at pool halls—always a nice career option to put out there for your newborn. But eventually, he'd need a government name.

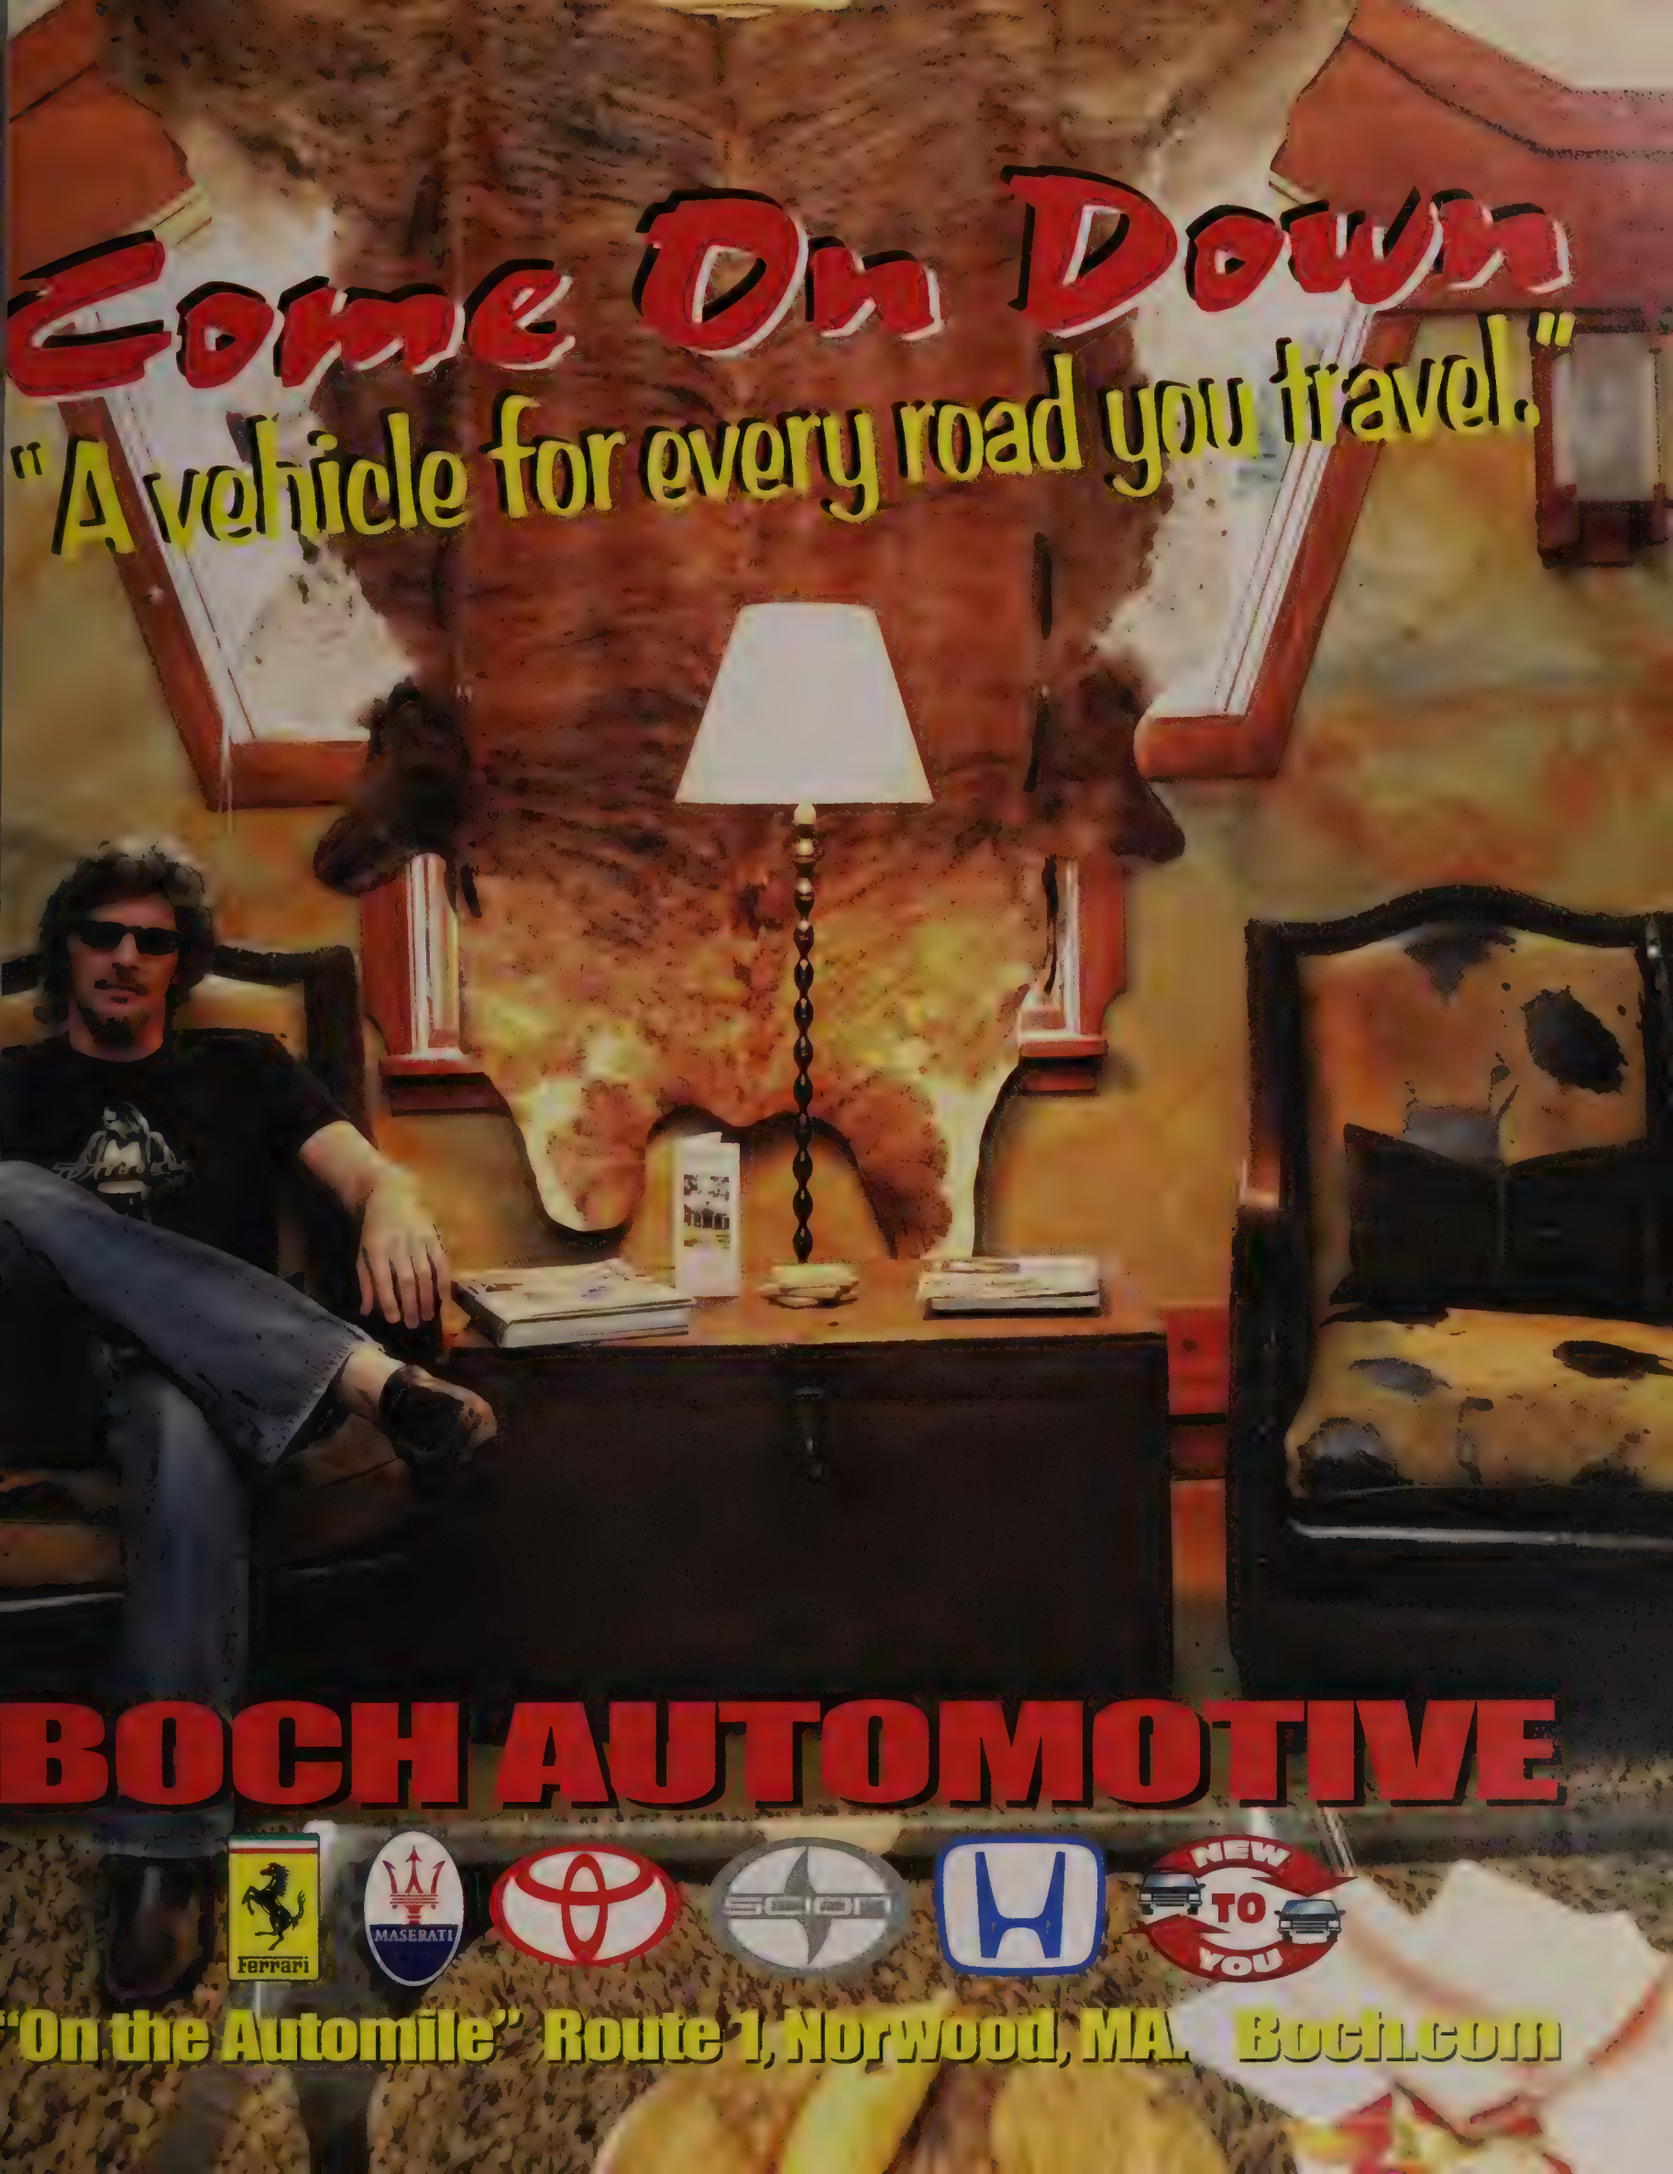
It's not easy to name a person. I can't even decide what to name a boat. I mean, Dixie Normous is funny now, but will it be funny the 100th time I say it on the radio? (Of course it will.) I did successfully name two dogs. My only misgiving? I didn't call one of them Critter.

So I'm not an expert in the name game, but I do know that you should resist the urge to focus-group your choices. A name should be the product of a dictatorship, not a democracy. If Stefani Joanne Angelina Germanotta had consulted her friends and family about what to call herself, it's highly doubtful that her mom would've said, "You know, I think you should go with 'Lady Gaga.'"

No, you should never tell anyone what you're thinking of naming your kid. Or if you do, you should give them a decoy name. Like, "If it's a boy, we're leaning toward Jambalaya Monstro, but Nerville Underarm Codbody is in the running, too. If it's a girl, we're gonna go with Heather Jr., because there just aren't enough girls named Junior." Then, whatever you name the kid will be a relief.

There are three main factors to consider when selecting a moniker. The first thing to think about is how other kids will pervert and make fun of it. Second, you should test how it sounds when you're yelling it in anger—you want something that rolls off the tongue when you're screaming it across a crowded Chuck E. Cheese. And finally, you need to find a name that hasn't already been tainted by someone you know. Even if I loved the name Luke, I couldn't name my kid that, because I knew a Luke in preschool and he always had a snotty nose. I can't saddle my son with a 90 percent likelihood of being the snotty-nose kid. Because that's how that works.

Eventually, with Baby Boy Dyer on the verge of going on the birth certificate, we went with Rhys (pronounced "Reese"). It was weird enough to satisfy me while being normal enough to placate everyone else.



Rhys passes the acquaintance connotation test, since neither of us knows anyone with that name. Monosyllabic, it's easy to yell angrily. However, I'm afraid that it does provide the rotten little children of the future with quite a bit of ammo on the mockery front.

"He'll be called 'Rhesus Monkey,'" said my mom, who's perhaps assigning too much simian expertise to grade-schoolers. But "Reese's Pieces" is inevitable, and probably so are "greasy monkey" and "Rhys-tard." Then again, I was called Ez the Lez, and I turned out just fine, after the prison stint and years of therapy.

Trying to predict taunts is a losing battle, anyway. My parents couldn't have guessed when they named me that a cartoon called The Smurfs would feature a cat named Azrael—and that this would become a taunt to apply to a kid named Ezra. Nor could they have foreseen the arrival of an alt-rock band that would lead to everyone calling their son "Better Than." They probably could've predicted the Ez the Lez thing, though. Point being: If a punk calls him Rhesus Monkey, he'll just laugh it off while beating the kid up and ostracizing him from the popular clique.

Bottom line? Names are arbitrary. If Rhys hates his, he can always go by his middle name. Nobody makes fun of Jambalaya Monstro. ×××

GOOD JOB

Advice on achieving professional success

MANY OF YOU ARE entering the job market for the first time. Some of you are facing the tough realities of unemployment. I have a few street-smart hints about repositioning your résumés and adding elements to them. Here's a story about getting jobs and getting noticed in an increasingly anonymous world.

I see dozens of young people each year who want to join the financial world and are desperate for advice. I always start by telling them, "Never call busy people first thing on Monday morning." They're starting their business routines for the week and you, all eager to get on with life, are just going to annoy them. Call Tuesday afternoon. By then busy people have settled into the rhythm of work. My friend Peter Solomon, former chairman of now-defunct Lehman Brothers, told me, after I mentioned this advice, "You know, when I was in the midst of any big deal, I would never call any of the key players until Tuesday. If I called them Monday morning, they would think something was wrong."

In addition to advice-seekers, I also see hundreds of résumés a year. Almost all of them are pretty plain vanilla: education, work history. Boring. And the vast percentage of those sent out blind automatically get tossed into the circular file: the wastebasket. What will get you the job is something you may think trivial, but that jumps out at the person scanning the résumé, something that possibly has nothing to do with your educational record or job history. "Is there anything special about you?" I ask job candidates. "Any sports history in school? Any hobby out of the ordinary, anything you collect or in which you have an unusual interest?"

Put personal things on your résumé. They have made your life more interesting and will continue to do so.

"Well," a recent young interviewee said to me, "I rowed crew in college, on a championship team, but it was the past. I didn't think it was relevant."

"Don't you know that there are clubs in life?" I said to her. "Secret places in the heart that others around the world will respond to instantly? Why? Because they were members of those secret clubs as well." Crew is one of these clubs. So are rugby and lacrosse and sailing and wrestling. So are field hockey and swimming and women's ice hockey and basketball and school radio stations, and Gilbert and Sullivan performances. And amateur rock or heavy metal bands. Put these kinds of things on your résumé, personal things that jump out. Never lie about these hobbies or interests. But trumpet them vigorously. Aside from getting you jobs, they have made your life more interesting and will continue to do so.

John D. Spooner is an investment advisor, author and novelist. Contact him at thedance@improper.com.

Here's an example. A young man based in Japan for several years called me, desperately wanting to relocate with his family back to the United States. But his fluency in Japanese, he told me, put him in a box where people needed him more over there than in America. His résumé looked fine, but had absolutely no life to it—a gray corporate past. I asked him if he pursued any hobbies. There were none listed on his CV. "I'm a black belt in karate," he responded. I got him to add it. Within weeks he received a strong response and several job offers to relocate to New York and Boston. The offers came from CEOs who, during interviews, spent the bulk of the sessions asking about the dedication and discipline it took to become a black belt. The unusual aspects of your life can open doors and keep them open.

Of course, it's still tough. Don't be discouraged in your search. I hitched a ride to California from Texas when I was starting my own job hunt. I had a vague desire to write for television or the movies, knowing nothing about either of those professions, except that they looked good from the outside. I had a number of interviews—all dead ends. One producer said to me, "Kid, you don't want to go through what I've been through to make it in this business. My advice to you is to go home to your family. Settle there." In L.A., it was as if people already sitting in their seats wouldn't get up for you. It made me angry and determined to show them.

Unfortunately, the challenges continue even once you land a job. These days, it seems that most people are working harder for less money. But attitude can be rewarded. One of my young relatives went to work for an insurance company. During her training period, she complained to me, "Every day they asked me to get coffee for the execs. I wasn't hired to get coffee."

"Let me give you some advice," I told her. "When we start, we all have to get on the radar of the people who can get us to the next level. If you make coffee better than anyone else has ever made coffee, and with a smile, you'll be noticed." Building careers includes doing the dirty work, with the same style and enthusiasm you bring to the billion-dollar deal. I scrubbed dirty mess-hall floors. I cleaned out the grease trays in kitchens (don't ask). I hated it and felt I deserved better. But I made the cooks laugh, and soon they moved me up to checking people in, with plenty of time off.

Pay your dues. Make 'em laugh. You'll appreciate the later success all the more. My relative never got the message and spent her adult life blaming others. This isn't a parable. It's reality. Love from the scold. ×××

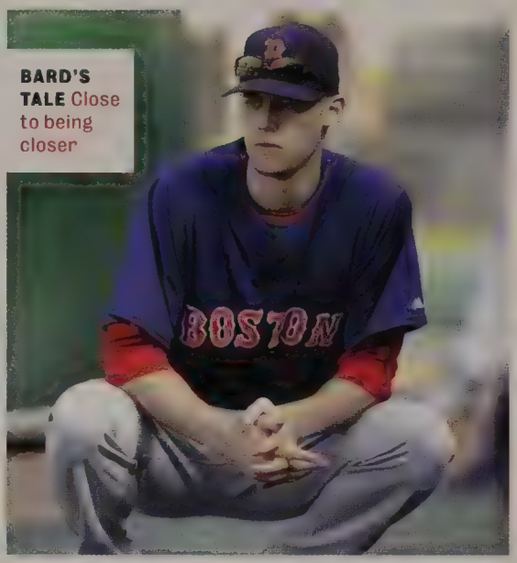
TAKE 5



The School of Sports { RICH LEVINE }

ON BARD, TIGER, REX AND GRONKOWSKI

5 POSITION BATTLES

Jonathan Papelbon vs. Daniel Bard What more could you have asked from Bard this season? His progression's been ideal, and the ninth inning will soon be his. But are you really ready to give it to him now? Yeah, this summer Papelbon's been more frustrating than scrambled porn, but if the Sox are alive in October, I still want Paps at the back of the pen. Let's not throw Bard into the fire quite yet. I'm barely over Craig Hansen.

BARD'S TALE Close to being closer

The Scowl vs. the Big Green Mile There's always a chance that Kendrick Perkins never completely heals this season, or that Shaq gets injured early. But if it's mid-February and both giants are ready to roll, this might turn ugly. On the one hand, Shaq's been starting games since Perk was eight and won't take well to a reserve role. Meanwhile, good luck convincing Perk he's not the best center in town.

Jonathan Wilhite vs. Terrence Wheatley This is sort of like choosing between measles and chicken pox, but the Pats need a No. 4 cornerback, and either Wilhite or Wheatley will win the job (or not screw up as badly). Considering the Pats selected Wheatley ahead of guys like Jamaal Charles and Steve Slaton, you'd like to think he can step up. Then again, you thought the same thing about Shawn Crable.

Tyler Seguin vs. Marc Savard Savard's future in Boston is in serious jeopardy, and he has every right to be pissed. The guy essentially signed a lifetime contract with the B's, and now he's trade bait? But honestly, what's President Sea Bass supposed to do? Tyler Seguin is the brightest ray of hope this team's had since Joe Thornton and not as big of a wuss.

Zoltan Mesko vs. Zoltan Mesko OK, I'll admit it. I just wanted an excuse to type his name a couple times. The truth is that Mesko, a 6' 4" Romanian rookie, doesn't even have competition; he's already the coolest Pats punter since... maybe ever. His tenure's going to be a fun one, as long as you don't mind all the Don't Mess With the Zoltan headlines.

2 POTENTIAL TV SHOWS

The Biggest Loser We're talking Brett Favre, LaDainian Tomlinson and a camera. I know what you're thinking: Favre in a landslide, right? No way. LT can out-loser anyone in the league. Or if he doesn't win, he can find plenty of other people to shamelessly blame for it.

Gronkowski & Gostkowski OK, so right now this one's just a name. Maybe they're attorneys at law? Maybe they own and operate a diner in downtown Boston? (Kowskis, probably.) Either way, I guarantee TNT purchases 12 episodes based on the title alone. It'll be like Rizzoli & Isles, except you won't hate yourself so much for watching it.

3 Bold(ish) Predictions

The Need for Sheed Paul Pierce alluded to this earlier in the summer, but I'm not sure we've seen the last of Rasheed Wallace. Sheed's still living in town (and plans to all season), and with at least one of the elder C's due to go down, Wallace is a prime candidate for the role of PJ Brown in 2011... or is it Mikki Moore?

Damn, Yankee Whether it's next year or the year after, Papelbon's time with the Sox is coming to an end. Now, if there was only another high-profile closer role opening up... Oh wait, there is! Papelbon's said publicly that he'd consider playing in the Bronx, and with Mo Rivera inching closer to retirement, Paps and the Bombers would be a perfect fit. Although, overpaying Red Sox castoffs is really more of a Mets thing.

PR for TD The Patriots team record for punt return TDs in a season is two. But by the end of this season, Troy Brown, Irving Fryar and Mike Haynes will all be tied for second. That's right, you heard it hear first: Vince Wilfork will return three punts for a TD in 2010! Nah, OK. But Julian Edelman will.

1 ONE IMPORTANT QUESTION

Does liking REX RYAN make me less of a Pats fan? If so, then ... well, I'm screwed. I love everything about the guy. I find him hilarious on every level. And the fact that he so offends St. Dungy is just icing on the cake (which Rex has just eaten).

4 DATES TO WATCH

8/27: The Sox head south for a must-win series with the Rays, and if you had your choice, who'd be starting the three games? Lester, Buchholz and then... Lackey? Beckett? I'm on Team Sloth.

8/28: The FIBA World Championship begins in Turkey. Rajon Rondo's there representing the U.S.; Ron Artest, Mars.

9/2: The Pats play their final preseason game at the Meadowlands versus the Giants. And by "the Pats," I mean a bunch of guys you hopefully won't see on the field again until next summer.

9/3: The Deutsche Bank Championship returns to TPC Boston, although at press time it's unclear if Tiger will even qualify. That's bad news for the tournament, devastating news for the Foxy Lady.

Soroff On AMANDA PALMER

The Dresden Dolls singer and Cabaret star talks mimes, pop music and the small of Neil Gaiman's back.

CURRENTLY APPEARING AS THE EMCEE in the American Repertory Theater's production of Cabaret, Amanda Palmer is a performer, director and composer best known as the frontwoman and pianist for the punk-cabaret band The Dresden Dolls. Born and raised in Lexington, Palmer, 34, attended Wesleyan University and, from 1997 to 2003, worked as a "living statue" (known as the "Eight-Foot Bride") in Harvard Square. After three albums with the Dresden Dolls, she went solo and in 2008 released Who Killed Amanda Palmer, accompanied by an art book that includes short stories by writer (and fiancé) Neil Gaiman. She has won numerous Boston Music Awards and was named "The Social Media Queen of Rock 'N' Roll" by The Huffington Post. Palmer lives in Boston.

Jonathan Soroff: So Cabaret—hasn't it been done to death?
Amanda Palmer: Probably, but I've only seen one really fantastic production of it: In 2001, Steve Bogart did it at Lexington High School, which is the whole reason I'm doing it with him at the A.R.T.

So how are you playing the character?
I think my take is far less snarky and aggressive. My approach to the whole show is that these characters are very real, not two-dimensional representations of ideas. I'm a woman playing a gender-bent man, and I think the approach I take is far more empathetic than people are used to seeing with the emcee.

Which do you prefer: bondage or burlesque?
[Laughs.] Why can't you have both? I want bondage burlesque.

Do the Dresden Dolls still exist?
Absolutely. The Dresden Dolls is what we call it when Brian [Viglione] and I get together and beat the shit out of our instruments.

I had a huge crush on Brian. What's he up to?
He's working on a bunch of different musical projects, but don't be surprised if at some point the Dresden Dolls recollide.

Was he your coin-operated boy?
Hell, no. He was far too opinionated. [Laughs.]

Who was that song about?
No one, really, but I think I wrote it while I was in a relationship with Ad Frank. But that song is about loneliness and fear of intimacy.

In heavy rotation on your iPod right now?
I just downloaded the new CD by Down System and the new Arcade Fire, and they're just sitting there, waiting to be listened to. Then there's one disc I listen to while cleaning my house: Gaba Kulka. She's Polish and sings both in Polish and in English. She's a force.

What would I always find in your purse?
I don't have a fin' purse! Who do you think I am, Paris Hilton?

Favorite breakfast cereal?
I don't eat breakfast cereal! You're killing me!

What do you do when you wake up: black coffee and a cigarette, a bucket of rusty nails?
No. If it's a good day, I meditate. If it's a bad day, I go straight to the computer and start twittering.

How do you stay still as a living statue?
You just do. There is no trick. You just fin' do it. No secret.

Any feelings about mimes?
I'm not a fan, although I did study very briefly with Marcel Marceau, and good mimes—the great, powerful, emotional mimes—are fantastic. But those are one in a million.

Favorite puppet?
Right now, I think it would be a sock puppet that someone recently made for the as-yet-unreleased Labyrinth spoof I created with a bunch of people in Scotland. It's that worm in the wall.

Biggest high of your career so far?
There have been many, but crowd-surfing to "Ride of the Valkyries" at Coachella is up there.

The Globe called you one of the most stylish women in Boston. Describe your style.
OK. Low-maintenance vintage explosion.

Small of back.

On a woman?
I'm kind of a tits kinda girl.

So how is the small of Neil's back?
Super sexy, of course.

Finish this sentence: It's not the size of the ship...
It's how it sinks to the bottom of the ocean.

Play you most would've liked to write?
Probably something by Beckett, just so that I could've been him.

First boy you ever kissed?
Brad Heald, in the basement at his birthday party, in a closet filled with ski equipment. Unforgettable. I was probably 12 or 13.

If your porn name is the name of your first pet and the street you grew up on, what's yours?
Ashes Glenn.

What do you think her specialty would be?
Well, Glenn makes me think anal. And ashes, y'know, there's people with burn fetishes. They must be out there.

Avril Lavigne's second record. My ultimate guilty pop pleasure.

Who's more original: Lady Gaga or Madonna?
I think their power isn't in originality, it's in how they're running their businesses, and they're both masters at it. Creativity and originality are apples and oranges. The problem with comparing them is that it's not 1984. Madonna broke ground that Lady Gaga is recovering and blowing up, but they grew out of completely different cultural landscapes. But both are master appropriators.

So they're cogs in a machine?
Yeah, but it's an important machine. There's always been and always will be pop music, and anyone who's not into Lady Gaga should appreciate the fact that she's filling a really important and eternal cultural role. ×××

Going Green

Witch Came First? Elphaba has always been green, but she wasn't always mean. Wicked, the musical prequel to The Wizard of Oz, explains how Elphaba became known as the Wicked Witch of the West (and how Glinda the Good wasn't always such a pillar of purity). Teen girls—even witches—fight over boys, spread rumors and dream of popularity. Things go sour when the angsty youngsters get older and realize they still can't reconcile their differences, beginning a lifelong feud that only ends with the arrival of a girl from Kansas. See Wicked Sept. 1–Oct. 17 at the Boston Opera House.

The A-Team ★ ½ Stupid even by the low standards one must apply to an adaptation of a TV show starring Mr. T, Smokin' Aces director Joe Carnahan's noisy, loutish shoot-'em-up aims to please but merely grates. Slumming Liam Neeson waves a phallic cigar around as the leader of a cocky, covert ops team spending so much time laughing at their own jokes and high-fiving, it's unclear how they get anything else done. You'll want to slap the toothpick out of Bradley Cooper's smarmy smirk. District 9's Sharlto Copley hams it up incessantly as crazy pilot Murdock, and some idiot in casting had the bright idea to let Ultimate Fighter Quinton "Rampage" Jackson quote Gandhi. The action is poorly staged and impossible to follow, and everybody's having such a grand old time that nothing ever feels like it's at stake. The end result is a smug frat party with explosions. (In the suburbs.)

The Concert ★★ ½ Sad-eyed Andrei, once a revered conductor of Russia's Bolshoi Orchestra, is now a disgraced janitor. Thirty years ago he ignored Brezhnev's orders to fire his Jewish musicians, and the ensuing decades haven't been kind. Redemption lurks on the horizon, as one day, while polishing the brass in the Bolshoi director's office, Andrei intercepts an invitation from Paris' Théâtre du Châtelet. It couldn't be that difficult to impersonate an orchestra, right? Why not get the old band back together? Writer/director Radu Mihaileanu skips jauntily over this scenario's implausibilities and piles on the colorful characters and broad stereotypes. There's much discussion of "the Slavic temperament," which in this case is code for drunken boisterousness. Assisted by his bearish, ambulance-driving cellist and a hilarious former KGB stooge, Andrei enlists gypsy fiddlers to forge passports and even persuades a tone-deaf gangster to sponsor the trip. The Concert's pleasures, however minor, come from the old underdog formula, as it's tough not to hope this rag-tag band recaptures lost glory. (At Kendall Square.)

Dinner for Schmucks ★★ Have wacky hair and false teeth ever made a performer more amusing? Or are they just the affectations of performers trying way too hard? Paul Rudd stars as an up-and-coming financial analyst who, after impressing his haughty boss, is invited to a special dinner party with the executive class. The only catch is he's required to bring an idiot that all these rich jerks can mock during the meal. Initially repulsed, the opportunistic Rudd suddenly sees a promotion in his future after accidentally hitting Steve Carell's loudmouth grotesque with his car. Every performance is hideously overscaled in this film, and director Jay Roach's unfortunate tendency to keep the camera within six inches of their faces underlines the strain. There's a pleading quality to Dinner for Schmucks that's the antithesis of funny, as watching talented people ham it up in pore-exposing close-ups inspires more pity than giggles. Why is Roach so hell-bent on turning such talented actors into prop comics? (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Get Him to the Greek ★★ Appearances to the contrary, Nicholas Stoller's follow-up to Forgetting Sarah Marshall is not technically a sequel. For starters, Jonah Hill plays a different character this time around, but the biggest departure is one of tone. You won't find the previous picture's gentle, inclusive spirit on display here. Get Him to the Greek is defiantly unpleasant, aggressive and gross. Sometimes it's amusing, but an icky aftertaste lingers. Hill stars as a schlubby, put-upon record company staffer who spends his days absorbing insults from his tyrannical boss (a monstrously funny Diddy) until assigned to babysit his debauched rock 'n' roll idol Aldous Snow (Russell Brand) on a road trip from London to L.A. What follows is a ramshackle collection of increasingly outré set-pieces involving booze, vomit, narcotics and ladies of questionable moral standards. Most scenes seem to feature some object or another being shoved into Hill's rectum, proving once again that anal penetration is comedy's new kick in the balls. (In the suburbs.)

Get Low ★★ Robert Duvall has made a career out of sounding the depths of that cuddly, incorrigible heart of darkness lurking just beneath the Mason-Dixon Line, and Get Low director Aaron Schneider trades on this shamelessly. The former Boo Radley stars as a Depression-era boogeyman who returns after 40 years in the woods with a giant wad of rumpled "hermit-money," determined to stage his own funeral. The only catch is that he wants to be around for the proceedings. Thank God then for Bill Murray, wryly playing a transplanted Chicago mortician

This victory lap from action's elders lives up to the hype.

The Expendables ★★★
Starring Sylvester Stallone, Jason Statham, Jet Li, Dolph Lundgren, Terry Crews, Randy Couture and Mickey Rourke. Written by Dave Callaham and Stallone. Directed by Stallone. At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.

SOME KIND OF MEATHEAD masterpiece, Sylvester Stallone's The Expendables is cinematic junk food of the highest order. It's an unapologetically old-school, men-on-a-mission movie that's so retro you'll feel like you should be watching it on a beat-up VHS tape. Both shameless and weirdly sincere in its dunderheadedness, the movie is a relic from a crasser, ruder era before irony seeped into popular entertainment and ruined everything.

At 64, Stallone isn't going gently into that good night. Nor is he following the example of Clint Eastwood and allowing age and with a penchant for fur-lined top-coats and a tendency toward drink. The characterization in the movie is what works, with odd details that inform their backgrounds. But Schneider seems to see it otherwise, ramping up the melodrama for a shocking revelation that is neither shocking nor revelatory. Overdirecting in an amateur fashion, he hard-sells a quaint story to the point where a humble little movie feels like it's constantly puffing out its chest. (At Kendall Square and West Newton.)

The Girl Who Played With Fire ★★ This spring's surprise art-house smash The Girl With the Dragon Tattoo didn't do much for me, but I can understand its appeal. Based on the first book of Swede Stieg Larsson's best-selling trilogy, the film spiced up hoary CBS procedural tropes with dashes of tawdry transgression and chic exoticism. It was like an episode of Cold Case, but with subtitles, facial piercings and rape. The Girl Who Played With Fire, alas, is one of those sad sequels that removes everything anyone might've enjoyed in the original. Noomi Rapace's iconic damaged hacker Lisbeth Salander is framed for murder, and only her beloved, beleaguered journalist Mikael Blomkvist believes she's innocent. Cripplingly, the film commits the Jewel of the Nile sequel sin of keeping the two characters we came to see apart for the entire running time. Meager as Dragon Tattoo's pleasures were, the two leads worked well together. This time, not a single word is exchanged between them. Occasional e-mails just don't cut it, chemistry-wise. (At Kendall Square, West Newton and in the suburbs.)

Grown Ups ★ Last year Adam Sandler gave the bravest, most revealing performance of his career, as a troubled, deeply unlikable comedian in Judd Apatow's underrated Funny People. As happens whenever Sandler ventures outside his comfort zone (Punch-Drunk Love, Spanglish) the audience recoiled, and now we must suffer another lazy retreat back to formula crap. The maudlin, sloppy and shockingly unfunny Grown Ups teams Sandler with pals Kevin James, Chris Rock, David Spade and Rob Schneider as childhood buddies reuniting for a weekend at a New England lake house. There's a screenplay credited to Sandler and Fred Wolf, but it feels more like a collection of pious speeches about old-fashioned family values recited over sappy music cues, while former Saturday Night Live cast members halfheartedly ad-lib and try not to obscure the product placement. The comic's Happy Madison company has produced some slapdash features in the past, but particularly in light of Funny People's brilliance, Grown Ups feels like their lamest effort to date. (In the suburbs.)

Inception ★★★ ½ Ever since his art-house smash Memento, writer/director Christopher Nolan has been obsessed with smashing up the syntax of conventional thrillers. Inception is the kind of pet project that could only happen in the wake of The Dark Knight, as Nolan scored a couple hundred million dollars by helming one of the biggest blockbusters of all time. Inception is an expansive, expensive brain-bender rooted in genre satisfactions; half Solaris, half The Matrix. Leonardo DiCaprio stars as a sullen corporate espionage agent slinking around Kyoto stealing valuable information by infiltrating people's dreams. Cleverly experience to reshape his worldview. Stallone's panicked response to his advancing decrepitude, most recently evidenced by his Rocky and Rambo reincarnations, is to simply ignore the clock and pretend the past two decades never happened. The Expendables wants to party like it's 1986, when musclemen ruled the multiplexes, women existed only to be rescued, and there wasn't a problem that couldn't be solved with a machine gun. It's a recipe that could spell disaster, but the movie ends up playing like gangbusters. Stuff blows up real good.

Stallone stars as the leader of a ragtag gang of aging mercenaries. Between prostate exams and bad plastic-surgery sessions, they hang out at a tattoo parlor/motorcycle shop owned by Mickey Rourke, where the guys drink, smoke, complain about broads and throw knives at the wall. All the steroids and testosterone almost stain the screen.

The boys are first seen taking out a boat full of Somali pirates in such quick and dirty fashion that it's impossible not to giggle at all the flying viscera and badass posturing. As a director, Stallone didn't seem to have a handle on the last Rambo picture's absurd gore quotient, but here he's figured out how to quickly cut away from the bloodshed so that it scores laughs instead of nausea.

The first time Dolph Lundgren blasts somebody's upper torso across the room with a megapowered shotgun, it feels like a declaration of principles. In contrast to modern, youth-oriented action movies, here's a bunch of grizzled old bastards who curse a lot and kill tons of people with high-caliber weapons. In other words, if you want something breezy, Scott Pilgrim is playing down the hall, girly-man.

The wisp of a plot finds Stallone and company dispatched to overthrow a tinhorn dictator in a small Latin American country. Thanks to the pernicious influence of a rogue CIA agent (Eric Roberts, so dastardly he should be twirling a mustache), this once vibrant island paradise has become a tyrannical cocaine factory, which means there are plenty of shoddy buildings for our heroes to blow up. And boy, do they.

Stallone is clearly unconcerned with the demands of his so-called story, instead smartly structuring The Expendables so that it boasts at least one giddily ridiculous action sequence per reel, culminating in the last 40 minutes, which is just a balls-to-the-wall killing spree. The movie is more about camaraderie, with a bunch of aging blowhards trading quips and enunciating with their neck muscles. Yet it remains entertaining because it's so light on its feet.

Sly dials down his usual tormented angst, opting instead for bemused grimaces and mostly playing straight man to Jason Statham's quick-tempered sidekick. Stallone isn't much of an actor, but he's always been great at reacting, taking the craziness in stride with his droopy, hangdog charisma.

Statham is the only one in the crew granted a life outside of the mission. (Woman trouble... figures.) Jet Li, Terry Crews and Randy Couture are each assigned exactly one character trait, while Dolph Lundgren gets a big wet kiss of a role as the gang's unhinged turncoat. The sight gag of the massive Ivan Drago fighting the miniature Li is consistently hilarious, with the lumbering Swede bonking his head on ceilings and crossbeams every time his quicksilver opponent scurries for cover.

For a world-renowned egotist, Stallone is a surprisingly gracious host at this party. Everybody has his turn to shine in refreshingly unadorned fisticuffs, and the auteur even allows himself to get pummeled by "Stone Cold" Steve Austin. ("I just got my ass kicked," Sly mumbles afterward.) In one early scene, he absorbs heaps of verbal abuse from Bruce Willis and a certain California governor, which, if you grew up watching action flicks in the '80s, is kind of like watching Mount Rushmore come to life and curse a blue streak.

Sly even passes off the pivotal tear-jerking monologue to Mickey Rourke, which almost throws the whole movie out of whack, as you see what a genuinely great actor can do with even this hackneyed material.

Make no mistake, The Expendables isn't very good. But it's defiantly anachronistic and succeeds at being exactly what it wants to be. I haven't had this much fun at the movies all summer. ✖✖✖

Dirty Talk

Sex Ed Do you feel intimidated by the problems of sex? This is just one of many questions asked by director Pier Paolo Pasolini in his 1965 documentary Comizi d'Amore (Love Meetings). Microphone in hand, Pasolini doesn't simply step across boundaries of candor and taste, he squashes them with his unabashed directness and a reality style of filming that feels surprisingly modern (think Taxi Cab Confessions meets The Real World). What he finds is a predominant theme of sexual naivety, astonishment and conservatism. It's the closest thing the '60s had to an HBO special. See it on Sept. 4 at the Harvard Film Archive. Matt Gelfand layered, the movie jumbles four separate realities into continuous sequences, as action scenes happen simultaneously across different dimensions but with the same characters. It's a huge movie full of meaty ideas, even when the backbreaking ambition begins to feel like a grind. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

The Kids Are All Right ★★★ ½ Simply delightful. Director/cowriter Lisa Cholodenko's family farce stars Annette Bening and Julianne Moore as lesbian helicopter moms flummoxed by their kids' latching on to their hapless, sperm donor dad. Played with no shortage of comic brilliance by Mark Ruffalo, he's a bare-chested, groovy organic farmer with a hankering for instant gratification and a penchant for phrases like, "Right on." Complications ensue. Gently ribbing certain Whole Foods lifestyle choices that'll be familiar to anybody from California or Cambridge, The Kids Are All Right has a warm, randy spirit, which embraces these characters not in spite of, but because of their imperfections. Moore, in particular, hasn't been allowed to cut loose like this in eons. She's a lost New Age girl trying to get her groove back, while Bening's tightly wound wine aficionado scores all the haymaker put-downs. Cholodenko's last film was 2002's wonderful Laurel Canyon, and Kids hits the same raunchy comedic heights. In Cholodenko's world, middle age is a funny and sexy place to be. (At Boston Common, Coolidge Corner, Kendall Square and in the suburbs.)

Knight and Day ★★ Tom Cruise had a great run. For 20 years he reigned as America's top superstar. But then one day he fired his publicist, jumped on Oprah's couch and revealed himself as an insane cult leader who alienated his fanbase to the point where even my mom doesn't like Jerry Maguire anymore. Now comes Knight and Day, which stars Cruise as some sort of rogue super-spy who falls into bedlam with Cameron Diaz's ditzy blonde civilian, and allegedly hilarious hijinks ensue. The gag here is that Cruise could either be a CIA agent out to save the world, or he could be a deranged madman. What's a girl like Diaz to do when the gun-toting assassin keeps leading her into shootouts at badly photographed Boston locations, all while manically assuring her "I'm handling this"? They're chasing some sort of super-battery, but that doesn't really matter. The real pursuit here is two faded stars working overtime for your affection, just begging you to love them again. (In the suburbs.)

Mesrine: Killer Instinct ★★ ½ The first half of director Jean-Francois Richet's two-part biopic (the second hits screens next month) stars great scenery-chewer Vincent Cassel as France's most notorious bank robber/kidnapper/cold-blooded killer. Based on Jacques Mesrine's autobiography, the movie has bad attitude to burn. After developing his disdain for human life while stationed in Algeria, the sneering protagonist cuts a wide swath of crime across several countries, taking on everybody from the Mafia to the Quebec prison system. Cassel's a mesmerizing firebrand, kneecapping and pistol-whipping at the drop of a hat. There's also a delicious supporting turn from Gerard Depardieu as a sinister mob boss with no illusions about where this game is headed. Unfortunately, Killer Instinct attempts to cover too much too quickly. The movie leapfrogs from one badass set-piece to another, skimming decades without enough connectivity to hold the story together. Mesrine's partner-in-crime Jeanne (Cécile de France) doesn't even arrive until halfway through the movie, so their affair remains underdeveloped. It's just a string of nifty anecdotes. (At Kendall Square and Waltham Embassy.)

The Other Guys ★★★ Every bit the movie Kevin Smith's Cop Out desperately wanted to be, Will Ferrell's fourth collaboration with his Anchorman director Adam McKay is another take on the oft-parodied milieu of 1980s mismatched buddy pictures. Except unlike Cop Out, this film has actual laughs. Ferrell tones it down and actually acts for a change, playing a weirdo forensic accountant stranded on desk duty. Supercops Samuel L. Jackson and Dwayne Johnson get all the glory, destroying entire city blocks chasing down pot dealers, while Ferrell and his frustrated partner, Mark Wahlberg, chase down a much more insidious band of Wall Street swindlers. Even at his most restrained, Ferrell's mugging can grow tiresome. Good thing Wahlberg plays all this nonsense totally straight. He takes the role so seriously, you'd think he was up for another Academy Award. Marky Mark huffs and puffs as if nobody told him he was in a comedy. His reaction shots are better than any of the jokes. Nobody plays exasperation better. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Salt ★★ ★ We've come to that point in blockbuster season when simple competence feels like something remarkable. Salt stars Angelina Jolie as a poker-faced CIA analyst outed as a Russian spy by a mouth-breathing defector. Is she or isn't she? It's a question you ponder when studying Jolie's brusque, Sphinx-like performance, as the role slyly takes advantage of her odd, non-human characteristics. What's left is a propulsive 90-minute chase sequence, executed in high style by director Phillip Noyce, There Will be Blood cinematographer Robert Elswit and veteran editor Stuart Baird. A technical marvel, Salt is the rare modern action movie that cares enough to orient the viewer during the excitement, using long Steadicam shots and savvy edits where most filmmakers employ chaotic cross-cutting. The retro charms don't just extend to Russian baddies; the whole movie feels like a relic from another age, as commitment to craft trumps CGI bombast. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Scott Pilgrim vs. the World ★ Based on the beloved comic by Bryan O'Malley, Shaun of the Dead director Edgar Wright's latest has an intriguing hook. In order to date his elusive dream girl (Mary Elizabeth Winstead), simpering Scott Pilgrim (Michael Cera, acting exactly like he always does) must first defeat her League of Evil Exes. Alas, Wright has little interest in the romantic aspects of this fertile idea. He's not really interested in anything besides pandering to his target audience with obscure pop references, protracted CGI fisticuffs and endorsing a worldview that can best be described as limited. It's like Juno for adolescent boys, at every turn reminding the teenage fans that they're smarter and better than everybody else around them. The moral of the movie is that it's OK to be an unfaithful, socially awkward, couch-surfing loser with nothing to offer. There's no coming-of-age here, just something deeply sad. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Shrek Forever After ★ ½ I can't believe I've sat through four Shrek movies. The things I do for you people! With its bare-bones animation—the empty backgrounds bearing the distinct stink of a direct-to-DVD sequel—this latest desultory slog attempts to reboot the series by positing an It's a Wonderful Life scenario. Mike Myers' charmless ogre gets fed up with all the burping, farting and pooping by his babies and longs for the more solitary existence of his old, undomesticated life. Dastardly Rumpelstiltskin (voiced by in-house animator Walt Dohrn, allowing you to hear cost-cutting measures in full effect) shows the titular ogre what life would be like were he never born, sending him off to wander around a blighted, dystopian Far Far Away. Shrek has to meet everybody all over again, an implicit acknowledgment that there's nowhere else to go with these characters except to start the entire series over from scratch. (In the suburbs.)

Takers ★ Making a brief pit stop in the theaters on its way to Redbox kiosks, this comically derivative cops-and-robbers tale is a vanity project for producers/stars/felons Chris Brown and Tip "T.I." Harris. The wannabe music moguls cast themselves in a blatant knockoff of Michael Mann's Heat, borrowing the sleek suits and epic shoot-outs like a couple of little boys playing dress-up. The ridiculously overqualified Idris Elba (best known as Stringer Bell from HBO's The Wire) stars as the cool, calculating leader of a heist crew angling for one last score before retirement. Matt Dillon plays a cop-on-the-edge, and perhaps the only L.A.P.D detective allowed to walk around the office in his undershirt. T.I.'s rogue ex-con gets out of jail with a "foolproof" armored car job, and everybody strikes dramatic poses against the glossy cinematography. Lacking a single original moment, the movie regurgitates massive chunks of True Romance and Mann's oeuvre. But Takers does manage to answer one question: How can you make Hayden Christensen even more annoying? Put him in a hipster fedora. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Toy Story 3 ★★★★ So this year's summer blockbuster for adults turns out to be a contemplation of mortality and obsolescence starring a bunch of animated plastic toys. You might reasonably wonder if we critics ever get bored writing love letters to Pixar, especially when it comes to a long-delayed sequel that on the surface appears to be geared toward audience familiarity and 3-D price-gouging gimmicks. Yet these sons of bitches have done it again. Tom Hanks' cowboy Woody and Tim Allen's career-redeeming Buzz Lightyear find themselves put out to pasture once young Andy heads off to college. They're confined to a shabby daycare center that carries eerie echoes of senior-citizen homes across the land. What follows is a rousing jailbreak adventure with a tragic undertow, tackling serious questions of death and abandonment in a mature manner that would make Ingmar Bergman proud, if only he'd played with dolls. This is a treasure. (At Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

The Twilight Saga: Eclipse ★★ Probably as good as any movie based on a Stephenie Meyer novel can be, Eclipse continues the mopey saga of sparkly vampires, shirtless werewolves and a heroine so vapid that in terms of toxic female characterizations she makes Carrie Bradshaw seem generous and self-aware. The new addition here is directorial competence, something the first two features sorely lacked. Filmmaker David Slade previously helmed the pedophile's nightmare Hard Candy and a very different vampire picture called 30 Days of Night. Also, stuff actually happens this time. There's a rascally pack of newborn vampires tearing up the Pacific Northwest, and the film picks up steam when it strays from the Hot Topic teen angst and charts an uneasy alliance between the vampires and werewolves against their common enemies. Slade's got visual chops to burn and shoots Robert Pattinson's fey dreamboat Edward and Kristen Stewart's petulant twit Bella in romanticized, wide-screen close-ups. But in the end it's still a Twilight movie, which means queasy sexual politics, rancid dialogue and terrible lead performances. (At the New England Aquarium and in the suburbs.)

GLAM SLAM

Grace Potter cranks up her sound and style for the Nocturnals' rebirth.

Adrien Broom

TODAY'S FESTIVALS HAVE diversified and grown up—and so have Grace Potter & the Nocturnals, who should expand their fan base at September's Life Is Good Festival. "I love the sentiment and the optimism behind it," the robust singer says of the two-day event sponsored by that local apparel company at Canton's Prowse Farm, where her band joins Ben Harper, Dr. Dog and Ziggy Marley on Sept. 11. "It fits into our personality as people in a band."

That personality has changed since Potter and the Nocturnals cut their teeth playing earthy rock 'n' roll at jam-band festivals. They shared a Bonnaroo lineup with Bruce Springsteen and Nine Inch Nails last year, and that gig proved a turning point. Her label Hollywood Records (home to the Jonas Brothers and Miley Cyrus) shelved a T-Bone Burnett–produced solo disc with Potter to hasten a separate Nocturnals session after executives saw a video of her newly reshuffled group rocking Bonnaroo.

"There's a time to change, and there's a place to grow, and that's what is happening in music right now," Potter says. "Everyone has seen beyond just the image of 'This is indie music' or 'This is jam music.' All those lines are being blurred, and it's time to be ready and embrace it."

She's clearly talking about her own situation. "I wanted to grow into something that has evolution and elasticity," the 27-year-old frontwoman says. "People think the label told me to dye my hair blonde and dress in spangle outfits.... There are all these conspiracy theories, but it's completely and solely my fault!"

Indeed, the girl who once blew out of Vermont like a hippie chick with a hurricane voice looks glamorous in coiffed hair, miniskirt and high heels on the cover of Grace Potter & the Nocturnals, the group's first CD with new bassist Catherine Popper (Ryan Adams' Cardinals) and rhythm guitarist Benny Yurco.

"The hippie chick from Vermont thing was not necessarily the real me," Potter says. "There was definitely a feeling of not wanting to look like 'little miss hot stuff' when you're walking around in Vermont. But deep down, if you're looking at pictures of me as a kid, you could see that I wanted to play dress-up."

Beyond image, her quintet sounds more polished and commercial on its eponymous new album, produced by Mark Batson (Jay-Z, Dave Matthews Band), who cowrote six songs. Potter grunts and howls like a female Lenny Kravitz on the hard-riffing, funk-edged opener "Paris (Ooh La La)," a far cry from the Bonnie Raitt or Janis Joplin vibe of her original gospel/blues-rooted quartet.

"This is not a humble, rootsy record. This is a ballsy, sparkly record with lots of attitude and sexuality," Potter declares. "The inspiration behind the record came from tapping into that place that I came from, that I never had shared before, my mom and I screaming our faces off to the Pointer Sisters and the Nylons."

She remains close to her parents—and still lives on their rural Waitsfield compound with drummer Matt Burr, with whom she launched the Nocturnals in 2003 after they watched the Band's seminal concert film The Last Waltz during college.

"I'm treating it like an Italian family where the kids never leave," Potter says, taking a break from gutting her parents' bathroom with her sister. "Our upbringing as kids was just constant creation. My dad wouldn't let us watch a movie unless we had a project in front of us, a painting or doodling. There was always something to build."

As a child, Potter was the quiet kid in glasses, alone at her piano. "I was a little dopey," says the singer, who still wears glasses offstage—at least until she recently lost them on tour. "I've just been going without them, which is almost impossible 'cause I'm literally, legally blind.... So it's been really interesting. I had to change the settings on my phone!"

It doesn't sound like the Potter who prowls the stage when she's not banging her Hammond B-3 organ, challenging every soul on a personal basis. "I kinda broke through all that shy shit, and I'm glad I got over it," she says. "I'm definitely a performer at heart." ✖✖✖

SUMMER BOUNTY

Yo, Ho, Ho and a Bottle of Fun

How many blondes does it take to throw a cocktail party?

Apparently two, and they should preferably be news anchors, like WCVB-TV Channel 5 on-air minxes Bianca de la Garza and Susan Wornick, who tag-teamed as the hosts of the Summer Soiree at Splash Ultra Lounge.

A benefit for the Zack Heger Foundation, which funds muscular dystrophy research, the party attracted the eclectic and interesting likes of Heger's parents—Margie Lamir-Heger and Rodney Heger (who are cordially divorced), her second husband, orthopedic surgeon Jack Tierney, bubbly fashion plate Julie Burke, JP hipsters Peter Kasper and Flo Zimmerman, Renaissance man Conrado Bondoc, and PR princesses Kristen Daly, Nicole Russo and Diane McNamara, as well as lots of sparkly others, sipping cocktails on the

Miami-inspired rooftop and trying not to trip into the ankle-deep swimming pool/fountain.

As is typical of most summer soirees, there was much talk of trips to the beach or the mountains, but somewhat less typical was the woman who said, "This weekend I'm going to my lesbian cousin's pirate-themed wedding on a lake in Vermont."

When pressed for details, she added, "A lesbian folk singer is walking them down the plank."

Everything else sort of pales in comparison, so I mumbled something about not having any real plans for the weekend in the hopes that I might get invited. (After all, how many pirate-themed lesbian weddings do you hear about?)

"I'm bringing my daughter," the woman said, after some outright begging on my part. "She'll find it wildly entertaining." (Well, I should certainly hope so.)

In any case, the party was perfectly lovely, the rain held off, and the scallops wrapped in bacon were so enticing that I couldn't resist burning the inside of my mouth on one.

Bianca de la Garza, Margie Lamir-Heger and Susan Wornick at the Summer Soiree

Julie Burke at the Summer Soiree

Sean Griffing, Jody Adams and Chris Langley at the Rialto party

Minda Nicolas and Michael Murphy at the Rialto party

Thankfully, there were cocktails to dull the pain, and by the time I left, there were still lots of hot young things arriving. Long story short: a summer party worth remembering, even without lesbian pirates.

Hitting the Deck

If you build it, they will come. Which is pretty much what happened when über-chef Jody Adams built an outdoor patio at her Harvard Square eatery, Rialto.

As for who "they" were, the tanned and attractive guest list included alluring and appealing characters like the newly (re)married Robin Culbertson, foodie flack Chris Langley, bivalve god Patrick Woodbury, hospitality hotties Dan Avery and Benson Willis, the startlingly handsome Michael Murphy (a Harvard grad student who's already designed and built a hospital in Rwanda), his partner in do-gooding, Minda Nicolas (freshly back from a long stint in Africa), food writer Andrea Pyenson, the Charles Hotel's ever-dapper GM Alex Attia and one man who said, apropos of pretty much nothing, "Sexual savant. That's what I want it to say on my business card." (Memo to him: I get a spam e-mail almost daily offering 500 free business cards. It might be just what you need.)

Needless to say, the food was superb, the tasty gin concoctions flowed like tasty gin concoctions should, and the party offered a perfect vantage point from which to watch cast members of the A.R.T.'s The Donkey Show practice their guerilla disco tactics on unsuspecting passersby.

What more could you ask for on a Thursday night in July?

I Stand Corrected

I wish I could say that I did it on purpose, to see if anyone was paying attention, but I'd be lying. Fortunately, the very observant Sylvia Bagley of Salem sent me a handwritten letter in which she pointed out that I'd referred to syndicated advice columnist Margo Howard as Dear Abby's daughter, when, in fact, her mother was Ann Landers. Of course, the fact that Ann Landers and Abigail Van Buren were twin sisters and famous rivals makes my mistake even worse, but what renders it unforgivable is that Margo is my friend. So, thank you, Sylvia and Margo: I owe you dinner, and you can sit next to Dollface. ✖✖✖

Brain Drain

I finally finished The New Yorker's summer fiction issue last week. That minor accomplishment—coupled with my recent reading of Paul Harding's Tinkers—has put me in a heightened state of mind. It didn't take much after a season of beach books (most regrettably, The Girl With the Dragon Tattoo) and trash TV (most shamefully, The Bachelorette). Having washed my swimsuits in Woolite and my brain in the witty writing of Joshua Ferris, I feel ready for fall arts.

My must-sees include the A.R.T.'s Alice vs. Wonderland, Mark Bradford's exhibit at the ICA and the world premiere of a new work by the Mark Morris Dance Group. Those productions join a longer list in this annual issue of the magazine. Jonathan Soroff also provides an insider's look at the MFA. Leave it to him to uncover the venerable institution's naughty side—proof that getting cultured doesn't have to mean getting serious. I, for one, can't wait for new episodes of Modern Family.

CELEBRATING ITS 10th year, the Berklee Jazz Festival returns to its musical roots with a New Orleans theme. In addition to the expected free events and marquee club shows, a Big Easy–style marching band raises the roofs of the brownstones on Columbus Avenue, and a free concert on Sept. 25 features the likes of Al Kooper and the Funky Faculty, as well as Jonathan Batiste (pictured). Other top, ticketed acts include Paula Cole, the Bad Plus and Terence Blanchard. The festival runs Sept. 15–25. ANDREW RIMAS

On the Ball

In a city flush with cash-cow institutions, each meathouse stakes its own claim to fame. At the Metropolitan Club, a grazing site for Chestnut Hill locals and city dwellers alike, that particular merit appears to be fat. Not just in the marbled rib-eye and porterhouse slabs served up by executive chef Todd Winer, but also (and more impressively) in his duck-fat-braised meatballs. Made from dry-aged brisket and finished on the grill, they don't miss a tangle of spaghetti, sitting instead on a creamy triple-cheese fonduta.

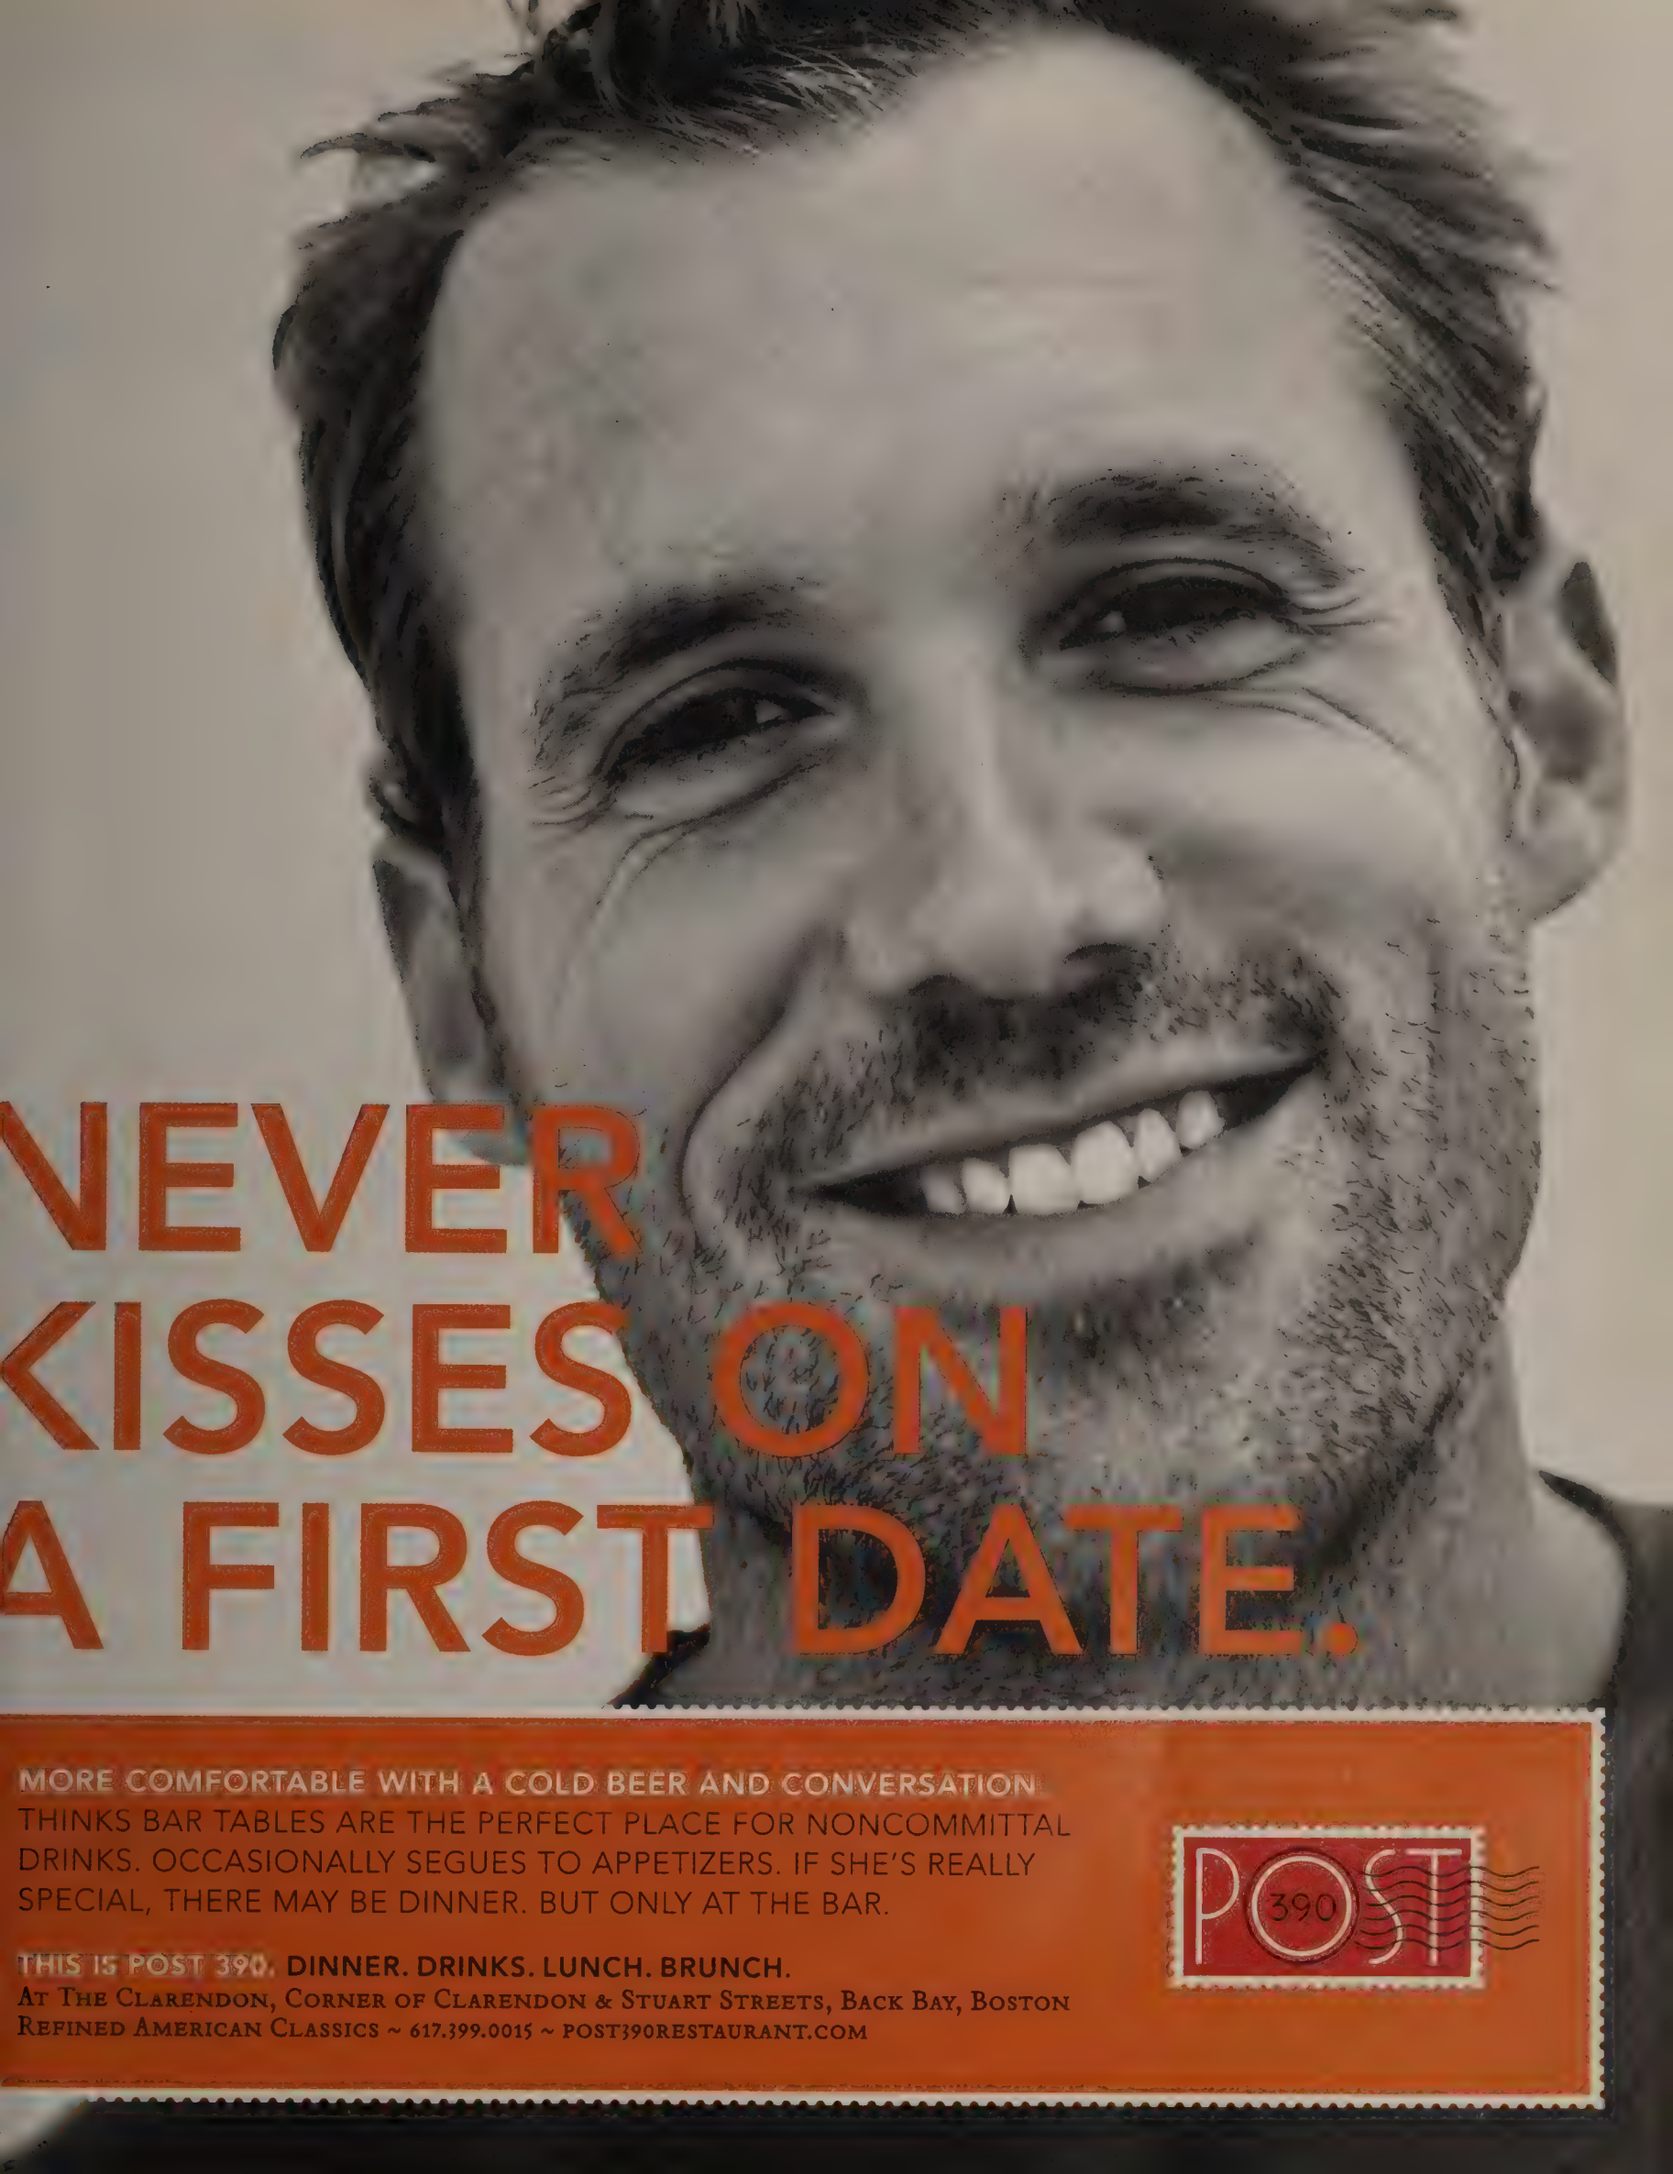
Drink of the Moment

Gastrofoam

As Maggie Batista methodically taps the circumference of an egg around the lip of a glass, it's easy to imagine the scene where a large table of patrons all suddenly want a pisco sour: A bartender turned into a short-order cook. "It's too small of a restaurant for that," she assures. "But I've done two or three. It's not bad."

Aquitaine's pisco-sour lineup is the work of Matt Coughlin and his bar team, who often find inspiration from the seasonal ingredients coming into the kitchen. Last winter produced a tangerine-and-garam-masala iteration. The spring brought frothy glasses flavored with rhubarb and ginger. Now available, the PERUVIAN SUMMER ($8.50) is dubbed in honor of the city of Pisco, where muscatel grapes were first distilled into the namesake liquor.

A simple syrup made with strawberry and basil sweetens the cocktail and its whitecap. More than adding some cappuccino-like whimsy, the crucial, load-bearing foam provides a foundation for a dash of whiskey bitters, the aroma contributing an earthy, cinnamon aroma that balances out the Peruvian Summer's citrus notes.



It may currently be the safest way to get your eggs. Just don't order a dozen at a time.

Craft Stake

There are elements that give Foundry on Elm a workshop aesthetic. Chicken-wire glass. An oak bar, built by a local mill-worker. But the inspiration behind the name isn't so rugged.

"In a foundry, raw material came in, went through a process and came out a finished product," co-owner David Flanagan says. "This is an acknowledgment of the original craft worker."

But rather than punch-clock dining or a menu that beats you over the head with sanctimony, Flanagan, with partner Ken Kelly (Precinct, the Independent), has developed a casual place influenced by the Dublin native's time in Paris. "I used to eat in brasseries five days a week," he explains. "I loved that it had such a wide variety."

The pair hopes to fill the near 200-person space with brasserie standards like a raw bar, coq au vin ($16) and steak frites ($19). Executive chef Sam Putnam, over from the Ashmont Grill, will also prepare smokehouse bratwurst sandwiches ($8), bacon, sweet corn and arugula flatbreads ($10), and other comfort foods made to leaven the French feel with tavern touches.

Opening this month, Foundry is the first of the team's three-phase incursion into Davis Square. In late 2010, a "pre-Prohibition" saloon will operate two doors down—the label carefully chosen, the hidden doors and passwords of preening modern speakeasies left behind. Taking over Jimmy Tingle's Off Broadway, a neighborhood club for music and comedy will debut in the spring.

For a team paying tribute to the craftsman, there's plenty of work ahead.

HAPPILY CORNERED

Darryl Settles returns to Columbus Ave.

WILL DARRYL'S Corner Bar and Kitchen succeed where the Stork Club (and, before that, Circle Plates & Lounge) failed? Given the combination of owner Darryl Settles (formerly of Beehive) and chef/manager Tim Partridge (Perdix, East Coast Grill), the odds are very high. After all, Settles ran Bob's Southern Bistro, previously Bob the Chef's, for a good long run, in the same Columbus Ave. location.

Partridge says the menu will feature "regional American food. Simple, elevated bar food might be the best way to describe it."

For example? "A pretty strong burger program" designed to appeal to local Northeastern students, as well as "shrimp-stuffed trout, pork chop, duck confit salad, mussels, raw-bar items and steak tips."

What's his favorite dish? "I'm really digging the steak tips," he says, although "the staff is into the hanger steak tacos."

How does he plan to fill the demanding roles of general manager and chef simultaneously, given the laws of physics?

"I'm still trying to figure that out right now," Patridge laughs, then explains that he hopes to get the kitchen up and running within a few months, allowing him to spend most of his time on the floor. "I like to think I can manage with a sous chef and myself."

ASANA HITS THE RESET BUTTON: Gone are the Asian influences and the supervision of executive chef Nicolas Boutin. Instead, chef Nathan Rich and executive pastry chef Nelson Paz will run the kitchen independently, focusing on "modern New England cuisine using seasonal and local produce." An example entrée on the comfort menu includes grass-fed beef burger and poached egg with oven-dried tomato, caramelized onions and aged cheddar. Sounds tasty.

ANOTHER RESET: Chez Jacky in Brighton is now Jacky's Table (only the name has changed). Plus ça change...

GREENER PASTURES

Even with big-name spas coming to town, local fave G2O remains unstoppable. After two years of construction, owner Joyce Hampers debuts its new home this month. What was once two historic brownstones is now a five-story facility, boasting all the essential amenities (massage, acupuncture, facials, manicures, pedicures, etc.), plus exclusives like brine-inhalation therapy, sunless tanning, a nap pod and a steam-ice fog room. Each floor has a theme, including a relaxing penthouse suite overlooking Newbury Street, complete with a hot tub and patio. My favorite is the salon floor, featuring separate wash, cut and color stations, with a table to plug in your laptop and enjoy free Wi-Fi while you process. Shampoos and conditioners aren't the only environmentally friendly items—the entire building's structure earns its green cred with geothermal heating and cooling, well water, LED lights and more. Leave here looking good, and feeling good about yourself.

Worth the Wait

Squeezing cider from apples isn't especially complicated; the fruit is crushed and its extracted juices usually pasteurized. But distilling that cider into ultra-concentrated ice wine is a slow, labor-intensive process that few producers besides Wade Holtzman even attempt. (Most ice wines are made from frostbitten grapes.) At his Still River Winery in Harvard, Holtzman freezes a five-apple blend from nearby Carlson Orchards in small batches, then lets the separated sugars and solutes drip out into a rich must that he cold-ferments over three months to develop flavor. The resulting digestif is nectar-sweet and leggy with a tart, well-rounded finish.

UNDER PRESSURE

Recovery gear: the next step in high performance or the emperor's new clothes?

Read more at improper.com/blogs.

LAST MONTH, I SIGNED UP FOR the Lowell Sun Half Marathon, a race more than four times the length of any I've run before. I'm aiming to finish in just under two hours, a time that's perfectly respectable but that won't impress anyone, which pretty much describes me as an athlete, as well.

In the sports world, compression gear is a hot commodity. Recovery socks are getting full spreads in running magazines. NFL players are currently shrinkwrapping their brawn under compression shirts. A few years ago, NBA commissioner David Stern got his undies in a bunch when superstars like Kobe Bryant and Dwyane Wade took to wearing tights.

Man of steel?

The company that supplies Wade with his stockings is McDavid, Inc., one of several firms now fabricating recovery gear. About six years ago, McDavid found the world of spandex had gone slack. "It got to the point where every average Joe mowing his lawn was wearing Under Armour," says marketing director Rey Corpuz. Working with Olympic hopefuls, McDavid created a line of products designed to both boost performance—by increasing support and the flow of oxygenated blood to the focus area—and aid in recovery, as increased circulation prevents blood from pooling and lactic acid buildup. Of course, there's an aesthetic hurdle. When actually wearing the gear, you feel like the guy who brings cleats to the company softball game.

"I'm going to be honest, you look a bit like a douche," my girlfriend said, as I modeled my pants and knee-high socks. "Is that really going to help you when you're not a peak performer?" I was going to find out.

Due to a weekend wedding, I missed 11 scheduled miles of training, so I had planned a rigorous week of catch-up. Three hard days in a row had me ready when my apparel arrived on Wednesday. That night I slept in McDavid's True Compression Recovery Pant ($75). Like Superman's pajamas, they were cozy and gave my thighs a snug eight-hour hug.

The next day I stepped onto the treadmill like someone walking across hot coals—expecting the worst and hoping for the best. I wouldn't say my legs felt peppy, but they weren't sore, and I banged out four miles at a decent clip. Facing another four on Saturday, I slept in the socks and used Friday to put my legs through a gauntlet of squats, lunges and sprints, all exercises proven to rip my muscle fibers like cheap burlap.

With another night in the pants, my legs felt fine, considering. A Saturday run in the socks, minus the stares, was quite comfortable. After one last night with vacuum-sealed stems, I awoke on Sunday to face the final leg: seven miles, 90-degree heat and what seemed like a headwind at every turn.

Running in the pants was like putting new tires on a car with no fuel, as I stumbled around for an hour, pain-free but exhausted. Though there's a sense your muscles are being pulled into action, like a puppet tugged by a string, and the stocking did provide a breezy cool I hadn't felt since a grade-school production of Robin Hood.

The benefits are hard to quantify, as you can't objectively measure an absence of aching or a slight increase in energy. I tend to agree with the case studies showing recovery gear decreases delayed muscle soreness but offers no real performance advantage. But what does the man on the street say?

"You're at least a little less sore the next day," says Will, an employee at Marathon Sports and a fellow former member of the Bates College track team. With a half-marathon time around 1:20, Will often runs in calf sleeves, but he admits, "some days your legs just feel better than others."

"It's probably—next to minimalist shoes—the fastest-growing market in running," says Justin Burdon, co-owner of South End Athletic Company. A near four-minute miler while at Boston College, or as I prefer to call it, "the inferior B.C.," Burdon refrains from compression gear. "I'm not in competition anymore, so it's not something I really need."

At $20-$60 just for socks, I'd pass, too. I especially wouldn't shell out $200 for the new Saucony recovery suit, unless I wanted to complete the superhero ensemble. But with the gear already in hand, it's going to get some use. An advantage, even minimal, even fictitious, needs to be grabbed this many miles from the finish line. ✖✖✖

TO THE 8:30 AM BLONDE ANGEL ON NEWBURY STREET: I'm having a Who's That Girl dilemma. You stole my heart without saying a single word. We've passed one another daily on upper Newbury near Urban Outfitters around 8:30 am for months now, and you have my undivided attention. I'd love to stop and chat with you, but we're both traveling at warp speeds in opposite directions. You're 5' 6" with shoulder-length blonde hair, stunning looks, always wearing sunglasses. Everything about your style and demeanor brightens my world. I'm the handsome 6' 4" Swede with shoulder-length hair sporting colorful European soccer jerseys hoping to attract your attention. I miss you like you can't believe, so I wear you on my sleeve. I don't care because you were my air, and now you're gone. Baby, it's only you I want to see. I know I let you down, but I'm ready to turn all that around. I know in life there are no guarantees, but this I know is true: You were sent to me. Give me one more chance to prove that I can still make your heart move, that I can give you what you need to see us succeed. I won't ever let you go, this I want you to know. WILD, WILD WOODS

A visit to Gloucester's haunted forest

THE GHOSTLY DOGTOWN comprises a brooding 3,000-acre area of abandoned woodland in Gloucester. Its thrilling eeriness has been wrapped in a mesh of myth for centuries. Artist Marsden Hartley characterized the place as "Druidic"—he painted landscapes of the forest's ominous rocks (including the huge Whale's Jaw). Some were engraved by Bible-thumping millionaire Roger Babson in Depression times, who admonished: "Use Your Head; Never Try, Never Win; Help Mother." Much earlier, when Gloucester's fishing industry was booming, pirates trolled the waters and bloody murder ensued with decapitated heads hanging from the mast; in response,

Dogtown: Death and Enchantment in a New England Ghost Town residents retreated into Dogtown. A witch, confounded by a crow, died there magically.

The book's modern-day thread follows the 1984 murder of a popular teacher. Suspect Peter Hodgkins was a moody, local weirdo and occasional exhibitionist. Hodgkins' trial (and his multifaceted oddities, both tolerated and feared by the small town) is shivery to read. Hypnotized by the place, Elyssa East spins out the murder's aftermath, literarily brooding on the way Dogtown's aura—including history, the supernatural, art, death—feels haunted, and haunting. ×××

FROM PAGE 27: "That is how, like Dante's Virgil, Marsden Hartley had led me to the edge of these woods, where the air smelled of thousands of crisping autumn leaves. The sky was oceanic with clouds as light and foamy as cresting waves. Wind stirred the treetops, ruffling the heavy silence. The map identified a shooting range immediately south of Dogtown, but sounds of gunfire ricocheted from all around. It seemed as if the wind had grabbed this sound and was tossing it back and forth, and occasionally dropping it like a ball."

Dining { ERIN BYERS MURRAY AND MARK GOLDBERG }

SOMETHING EXTRA

Evoo gets some new digs but stays faithful to its cuisine.

MARK GOLDBERG MADE a soft-spoken dinner mate. Sitting down with the Woodward chef at a window-side table, I found myself leaning in to catch his story.

Seems six years into a career on the line at Back Bay's Mistral, Goldberg's vocal chords were so damaged from yelling across the kitchen that he needed surgery to repair them.

"You hear singers talk about projecting from the diaphragm. Apparently, that would've been helpful to know when I was expediting."

It was fitting, then, that we'd chosen to eat in a low-key, low-volume restaurant where no shouting was required. Evoo, which moved from Somerville to a new building in Kendall Square last spring, has a polished, country look, with folksy tunes floating overhead. It seems built for those who like discussion with their dinner.

Goldberg was anxious to try a few of the signature dishes, which the owner, chef Peter McCarthy, has been serving since opening his original location in 1998. We also selected a few daily specials from the list of "homegrown selections."

"There isn't a whole lot I don't want," Goldberg said, examining the choices.

Just then, McCarthy—who along with wife, Colleen, also own the neighboring pizza joint Za—appeared to offer his recommendations. He explained that the menu changes daily, a format that "depends on which animals want to hang out with us for a little while."

We ordered the signature confit of rabbit and wild-greens salad ($12) and a special: a batter-fried squash blossom filled with cloumage ($10), an artisanal cheese curd made by Shy Brothers Farm in Westport. Farmer and purveyor names were sprinkled throughout the menu, indicating McCarthy's dedication to local sourcing.

GARDEN PARTY A stuffed squash blossom and a confit of rabbit and wild-greens salad feature local products.

Though an advocate himself, Goldberg admitted he has a hard time putting it into practice, as most small farms can't keep up with the volume of his hotel dining room. But during his term at the Winnetu Resort on Martha's Vineyard, where he worked for a few years before opening Woodward, Goldberg had his choice of locally grown options.

As our two vibrant dishes arrived, he said, "Personally, I like that he lists all the farmers on the menu. I might not know who Dick is, but I know there's a person behind every ingredient, which leaves an impression."

As did the salad, an elegant combination of chunky, shredded rabbit, bits of sour cherry and perfectly dressed greens. The squash blossom was firmly fried and oozed with the cloumage. Beside it sat zucchini ribbons flecked with pesto. Creamy and bright, the flavors captured late summer in New England.

Sipping a few hefty glasses of red wine (Joel Gott zinfandel, $11, and Yalumba shiraz, $9), we gazed at the outdoor dining scene. Goldberg had spotted quite a few packed patios on his drive to Cambridge, but he has little time to visit the neighborhood for fun in the sun. "I'm a South Shore guy with three kids and a hotel restaurant."

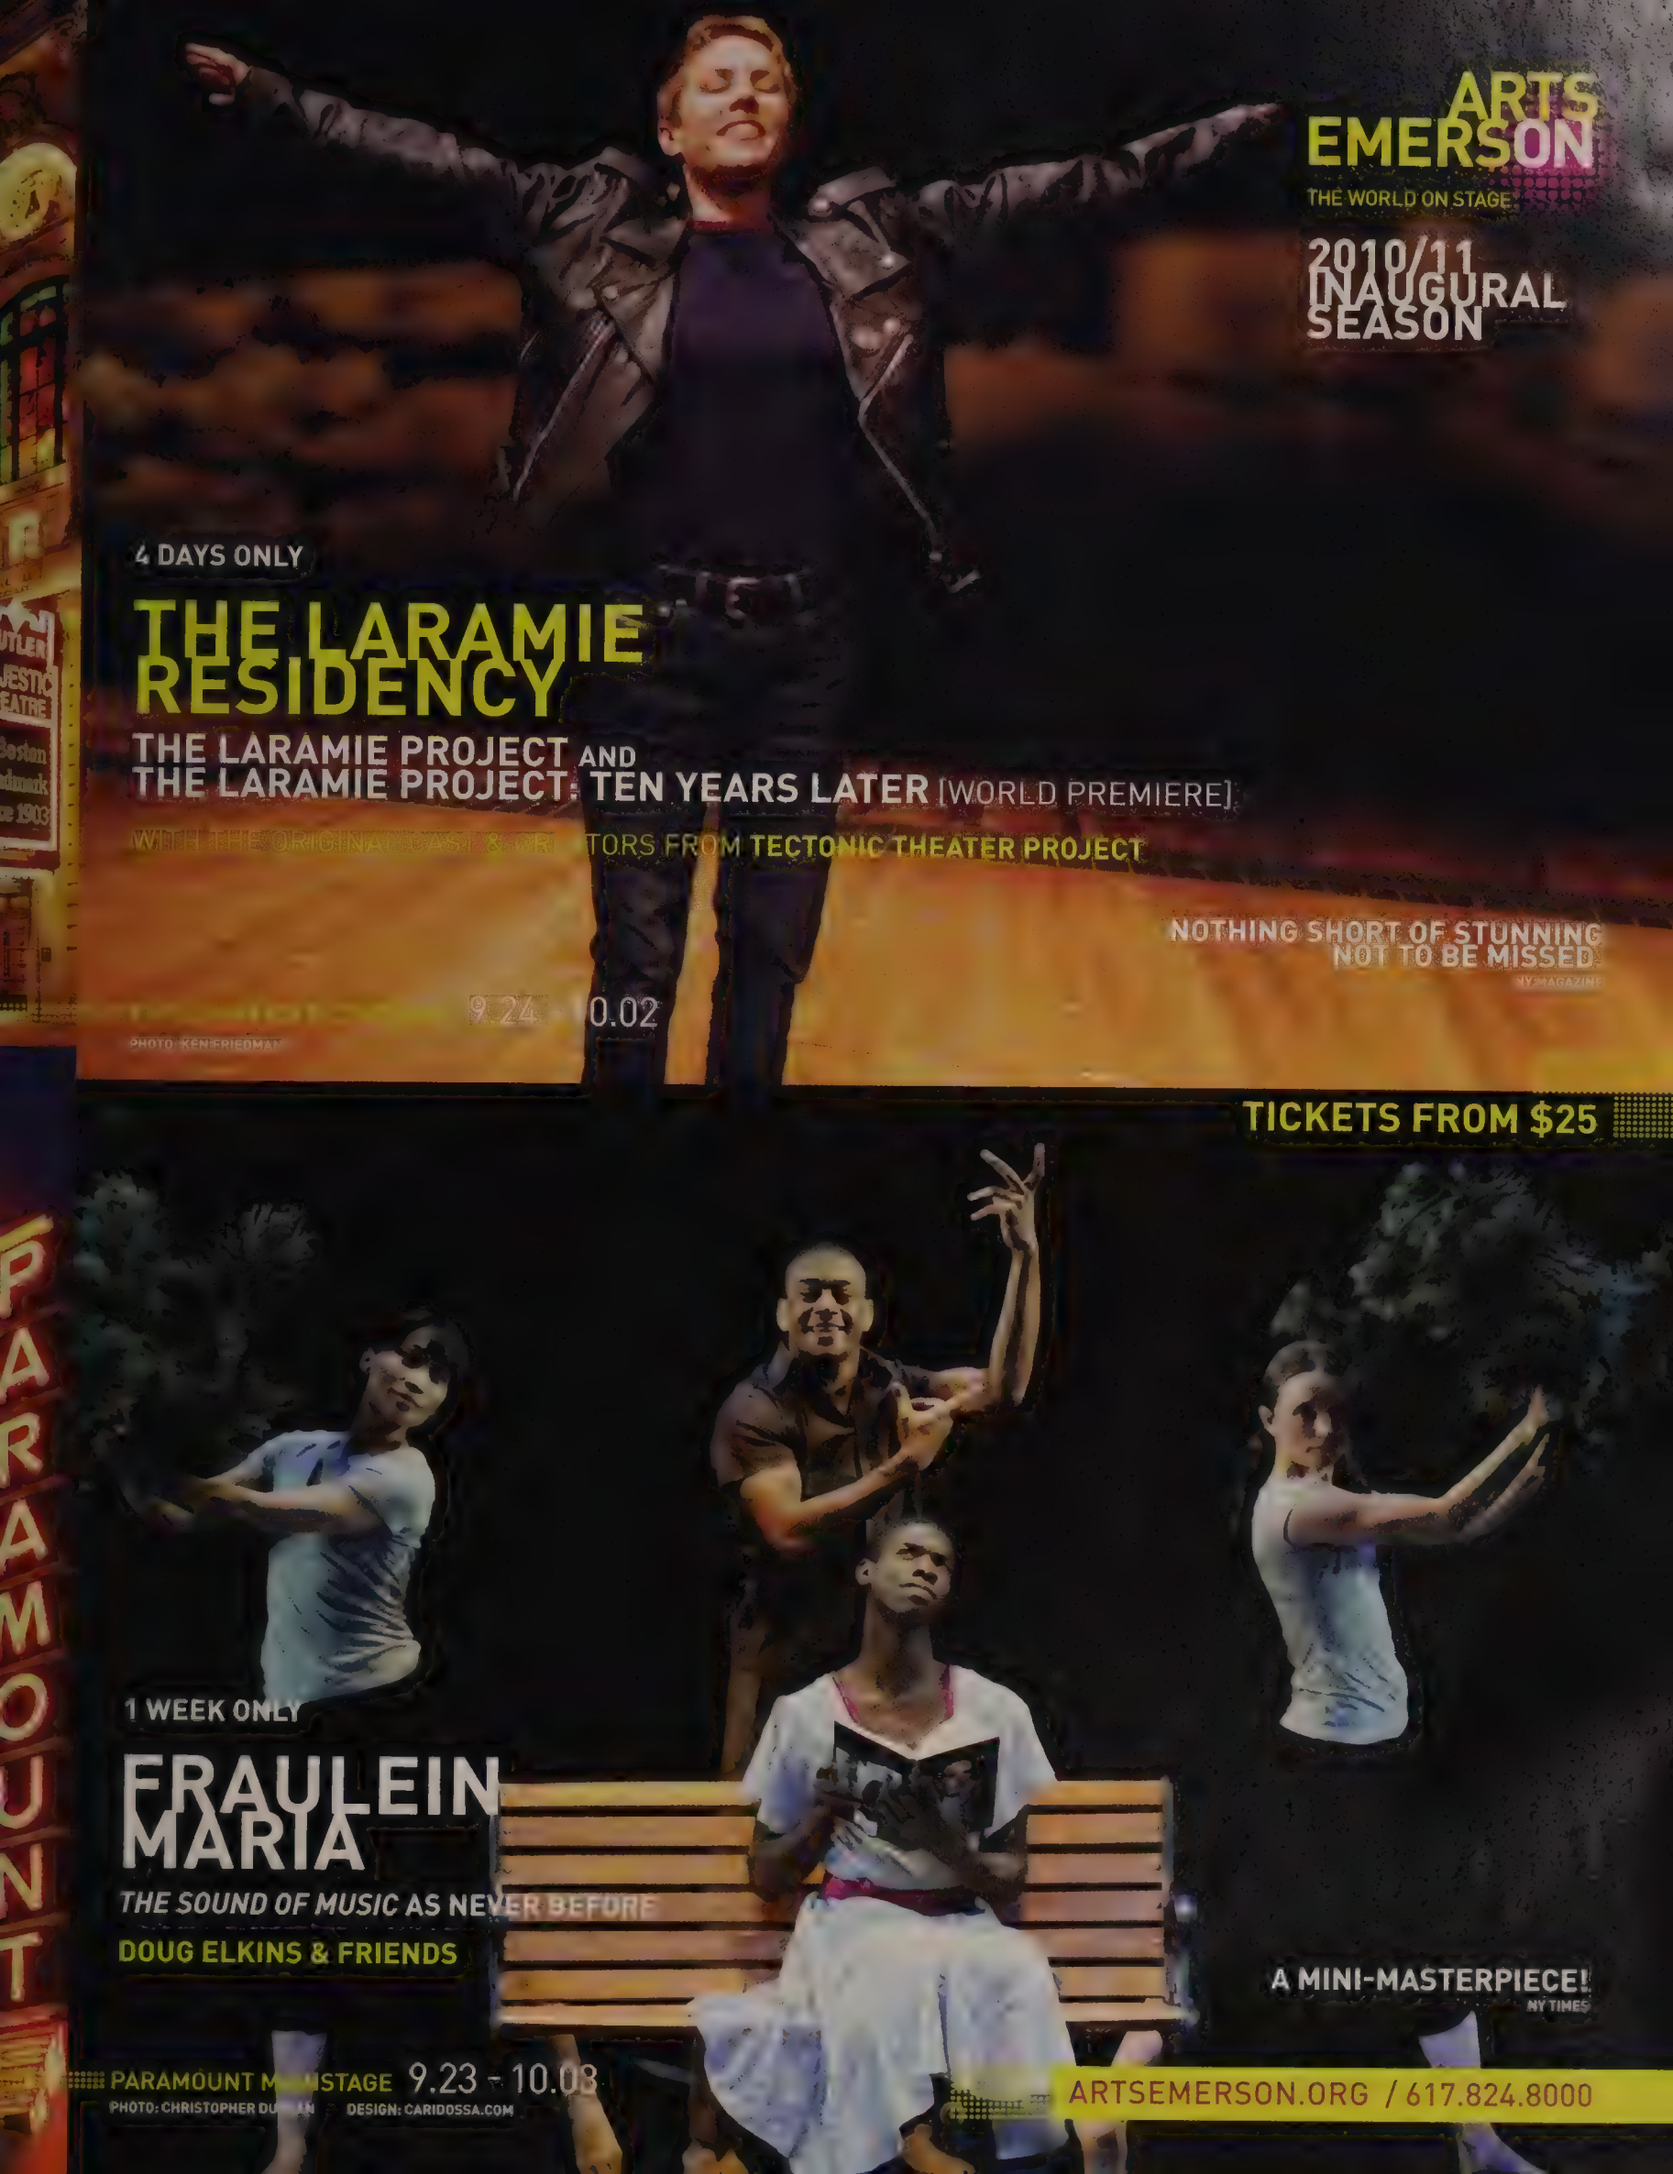
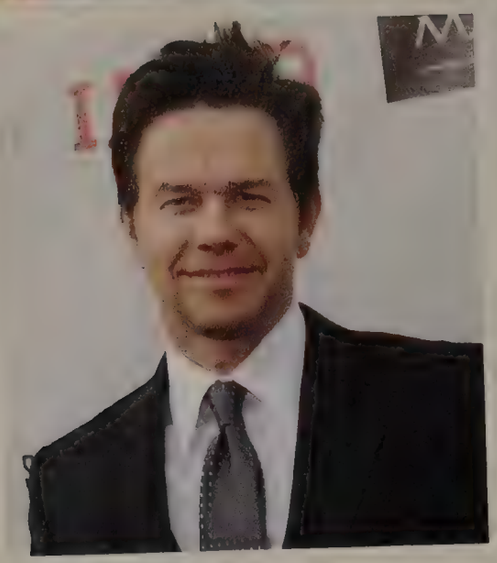
Dick's sweet-corn cake



But after a few bites of our entrees, he'd made plans to come back. We shared the Chinese box ($26), a sweetly fragrant mound of mustard-glazed shrimp, locally raised beef and organic brown rice, as well as the poblano relleno con puerco ($25), a hearty, batter-fried pepper stuffed with roasted pork. With a side of corn-basil custard, we both considered that dish a hit. Opting for a savory dessert, we tried Dick's sweet-corn cake ($9), tasty with thyme and a dollop of blueberry compote, but a bit dry.



On our way out, we agreed the combination of a new locale and old menu worked well. "It's inventive enough that I'm intrigued, but still local enough that I know what he's serving," Goldberg said. "Next time, I'm bringing my wife." ✖✖✖

WEAK OFF

The perils of relaxation

Read more at improper.com/blogs

ONCE UPON A TIME, I KNEW how to take a vacation. Spring break, senior year of college, I was a leisure expert. For a solid week, I sat on the beach, slept 'til noon and did my part to bolster the share price of the Bacardi company. I had no schedule. I definitely had no goals. My only accomplishment: the discovery that a pair of empty Heineken mini-kegs could be strapped to my arms and used as makeshift swimmies in the pool. That was important work, but it happened by accident, like the discovery of penicillin and Kate Gosselin's career.

My definition of a great vacation is that you're depressed when it ends. It's like the phenomenon of Sunday depression (which arrives on the tail end of a great weekend) but more intense. After that spring break, I was bummed out. After my honeymoon: bummed out. After my weeklong vacation on the Cape this past month: sort of relieved.

This was my first full week away in four years, so I was ready for some serious relaxation. I fit a week's apparel in a carry-on. If I ran out of clothes, I just wouldn't wear any. The house we rented had a hammock. I planned to get so relaxed that tree sloths would climb into the hammock and check my pulse.

Except that somewhere between college and your early 30s, the definition of a vacation seems to change. Instead of doing as little as possible, vacations turn into a contest to see how many activities can be crammed into a single day. I guess the idea is to wring as much fun as possible out of a limited amount of time, and that's a normal impulse. But over a week on the Cape, there was only one day when I didn't get up before dawn. And if you're waking up to an alarm—never mind before sunrise—then you're doing vacation wrong.

It sounds churlish to whine about golfing and fishing, but I fail to understand why these activities need to be undertaken at first light. Especially golf. At least with fishing, there's a primitive sense of adventure when you're heading out into shark-infested waters to do battle with the fanged monsters of the deep. There's a purpose to that, and if you're bad at it, you can at least blame the fish. But golf? I suppose there's a thrill to sneaking your cooler of beer past the ranger, but you can do that in the afternoon, too. So why arrive at the unholy hour of 6:30 am?

The rationale, as I kept hearing it, was that when you get up that early, you finish early and have the whole rest of the day. The whole rest of the day to do what, is the question.

> If you're waking up to an alarm, then you're doing vacation wrong.

And the answer is: more activities. You're definitely not getting into that hammock.

Which is OK, actually, because I've come to the conclusion that hammocks are ridiculous devices. Whenever you have a hammock, chances are you'll also have access to a bed. And if hammocks were more comfortable than beds, we'd all sleep in hammocks every night, and mattresses would be relegated to Corona commercials and beachfront resorts.

We rented a great house in Chatham, but even that aggravated me on some level. When you're in college, you cram so many human beings into a rental that you've got people sleeping on the couches, on the lawn, inside the chimney—and as a consequence, everyone pays $5.64 for the week and you don't really think about the total outlay. When you're a grownup, you actually start doing the math and realizing what insane money the homeowners are making over the summer. Then you get resentful and jealous. At least, I do.

The healthy perspective would be to say, "Well, I'm really fortunate to be able to rent this place for a week," but I am a shallow and covetous person. I don't want to just visit for a week. I want to stay there all summer, complaining about the riffraff as I sip a martini on the third deck of my yacht, The Condescender.

I realize that complaining about a vacation is asinine. But I'm really just being self-critical about my own approach to leisure. When we arrived at the house, I saw that the prior tenants had left their schedule on the bulletin board. And I made fun of it not just because it was deeply hokey—stuff like, "Muffy and Wormington will give a presentation on their trip to Myrtle Beach"—but because of the very idea of making a schedule for a vacation. But on most days, their only listed activity was "happy hour." Perhaps at some point, you need a schedule to tell you that you have no schedule. ✖✖✖

WELKER REDUX

The Patriots MVP is back.

NOT MUCH SHOCKS ME these days. Upsets, no-hitters, drugs, Cinderella stories, Scott Boras' clients bitching, HGH and so on. Just when it seems like I've seen it all, boom goes the dynamite!

Take Wes Welker. The guy isn't normal. He's "supernormal" (for want of a better word). I've watched him during the two-a-days behind Gillette Stadium, and each time he runs a pattern, I shake my head in disbelief. When Welker went down on the loose Houston Texans' turf during the regular season finale on Jan. 3, everything changed for the New England Patriots. And it was all bad (the loss to the Baltimore Ravens a week later was disgraceful).

Knee injuries to linemen are one thing. Knee injuries to 5' 8" wide receivers, who live and die by speed, quickness and cuts on a dime, are lethal.

With regrets to Tom Brady, who needs to bring his "A" game back to Gillette Stadium this fall, Welker has been the MVP of the Patriots ever since he set foot onto the field in Foxboro in September 2007. He has caught 112, 111 and 123 passes in each of the last three seasons for 1,175, 1,165 and 1,348 yards, yards, respectively. Nobody has caught more passes, and only five receivers have tallied more yards over that span. His forte is moving the chains. And nobody does it better, particularly in the middle of the field, where the most pain is dealt.

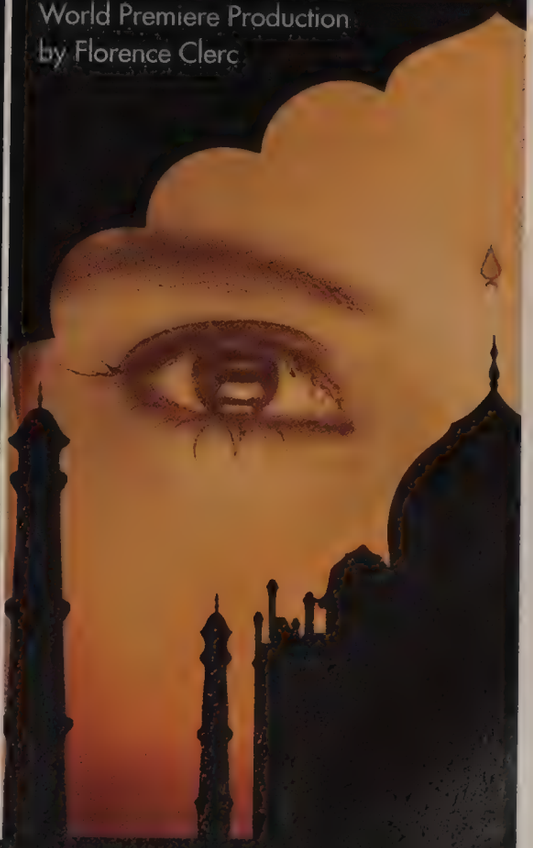
By now, everybody knows Welker's story. Bill Belichick traded for him simply because, when he played for the Dolphins, the Patriots couldn't cover him. So the Patriots gave the Dolphins what appeared to be a big price, a second-round pick, in exchange for this thorn in their side.

I don't know for certain, but I expect he'll play 16 games and the postseason. I couldn't have been more wrong about his injury.

But enough about Welker's past. It pales in comparison with his accomplishments since Jan. 3. I spoke to him two weeks after the injury and surgery. He seemed depressed. But what stuck with me were his eyes. They grew bigger when he talked about the rehabilitation. Welker guaranteed he'd be back, just as good as ever.

I wanted to believe him. Of course, I didn't. Some athletes have miraculous recoveries, but this seemed different. Welker earns a living with his tendons, cartilage and leg muscles. His talent is to dodge, to make other men miss.

The first inkling we got that Welker may have been right was during the Celtics playoff games against the Orlando Magic. I was enjoying the Celtics win when the Jumbotron flashed to a few guys sitting courtside. One of them was Welker. He saw himself, waved and stood up. Then he started doing foot-fire (football and basketball players know what I'm talking about), lifting his knees as if he were sprinting at 100 miles per hour.



The sold-out Garden crowd went crazy. Was that flippin' Welker, the guy who's supposed to be out until December? Damn straight it was. And he was ready for Dancing With the Stars.

At the opening of training camp he said, "I'm just happy to get out there and get to play and be out there with my teammates. That's been my goal since day one, and I'm just happy for today to finally get here. You all think it's quick. It seems like a long time to me."

Welker now appears to be the same guy who was breaking defensive backs' ankles. I don't know for certain, but I expect he'll play 16 games and the postseason. I couldn't have been more wrong about his injury.

I knew the Patriots MVP was special, but I misjudged the degree. ×××

TAKE 5

The School of Sports {RICH LEVINE}

ON HERZLICH, DELONTE, DICE-K AND KALISH

RUSH MORE
Kevin Faulk

5 PATS PROP BETS

Wes Welker Catches: Over/Under 100 There's no chance in hell I'd bet against Welker's abilities. Seriously, ask me if I think Wes Welker can ride a wave on the back of a great white shark. Yes! Of course he can. See? So I'm not about to say that Welker won't catch 100 passes this season. It might be absurd to expect so much, but everything this guy does is absurd. It's the standard. Pick: Over

Laurence Maroney Touchdowns: Over/Under 8.5 I hate myself for still believing in Laurence Maroney. I wish I could quit him. Right now, I'm more pathetic than Kourtney Kardashian (and even more so after making that reference). But as long as the Pats continue to give him chances, I'll continue holding out hope that the good ship Kool-Aid Man can turn this mess around. I'm going down with this ship like Dido (OK, that should make up for the Kardashian joke). Pick: Over

Kevin Faulk: More Rushing or Receiving Touchdowns in 2010? Faulk has 16 rushing touchdowns over his 11-year career compared to 15 touchdowns on the receiving end: Which will he have more of this season? My gut tells me receiving, which is why my money's on rushing. I'm thinking he scores on a few draw plays out of the shotgun. Maybe a Super Bowl XXXVII-esque direct snap just for kicks. I'm also thinking Faulk's gonna look nice in the Patriots Hall of Fame. Pick: Rushing

Defensive Ranking: Over/Under 11 Last year, the Pats ranked 11th overall on defense, and the question is: Is this season's D any better? This was debatable before the Leigh Bodden injury. Now that Bodden's gone the way of Ty Warren, there's no question. Get ready for a lot of 34-30 games. Pick: Under (in a bad way)

Total Team Wins: Over/Under 9.5 I can't shake the feeling that this is a nine- or 10-win team. No better. No worse. But the difference between nine and 10 wins is bigger than Brandon Spikes. (No, I'm not talking about that.)* With 10 wins, the Pats sneak into the playoffs. With nine, they no longer need to sneak onto the golf course. Pick: Over

*Actually, I am.

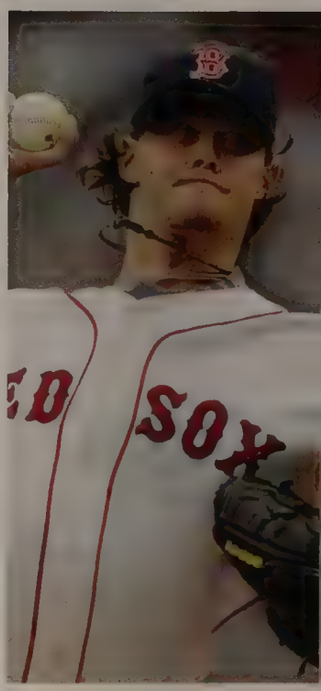
2 THOUGHTS ON DELONTE WEST

The Return I'm still (and I don't care when you read this) in shock over Delonte West signing with the C's. I just don't know what I did to deserve this. How I could be so lucky? Hearing about Delonte was like someone telling me that NBC brought back Seinfeld. Never in my wildest dreams...

Speaking of Wild Delonte obviously has a few off-the-court issues, and I don't want to make light of anything he's going through (Mile hunting's a fair game, though). But we have to mention the fact that the Celtics locker room has morphed into a ground-breaking human experiment. Can we talk about the minds that will be mixing it up in there? They should give all the reporters white coats (and give Doc another raise).

4 DATES TO WATCH

9/12: The last time the Pats opened the season with a loss to the Bengals, New England won the Super Bowl. (Wanted to share that, just in case.)



9/13: Daisuke Matsuzaka turns 30, but in typical Dice-K fashion, it's actually taken him 60 years.

9/17: Bruins Training Camp begins, and that means the start of Tyler Time—Tuukka Time's younger, more-talented cousin from Canada.

9/19: The last time the Pats opened the season with a loss to the Bengals, followed by a loss to the Jets, New England won the Super Bowl (Yes, just in case.)

3 Reasons to Still Watch the Sox

Mad Love You'd never have believed Adrian Beltre would become the most lovable member of the Sox squad, but it's true. As is the fact that Boston will soon be saying good-bye to this unexpected hero. So keep a close eye on the smooth-fielding, bone-crushing slugger; he won't be here much longer. (Also, don't call him lovable to his face, or you're leaving with broken ribs.)

Cy of Relief Clay Buchholz's Cy Young chances died with the Sox playoff hopes, but that doesn't mean the kid will be any less dominant. Or that he won't be worth every second of the time you'll commit to watching. If there's one drawback, it's realizing how much more Clay's emergence might've meant, had Lackey and Beckett decided to show up.

A Diving Force I've watched Ryan Kalish's diving catch at least 17 times now, and that thing's like The Big Lebowski—it keeps getting better. Sure, Kalish needs a little polish at the plate, but I don't care if he swings like Ryan Seacrest over this last month if it means a few more killer catches.

1 ONE TOUGH DECISION

I can't imagine how badly MARK HERZLICH wants back on a football field, and I have no idea what it must be like to walk in his shoes. That said, I hope he doesn't rush back on that foot injury. Forcing the issue won't help in the long term. Just ask Dustin Pedroia.

Soroff On KIM RAVER

The TV star talks about growing up on Sesame Street, creepy directors and sexy German words.

BORN AND RAISED IN NEW YORK, TV and film actor Kim Raver, 41, earned a fine arts degree from Boston University. Although Raver appeared on Sesame Street from the ages of six to nine, her big break came during her five years playing a paramedic on Third Watch. Her movie credits include Night at the Museum, Prisoner, City Hall, Mind the Gap and Keep Your Distance. Following the wildly successful cult hit 24, she starred in the Sex and the City spin-off, Lipstick Jungle. Most recently, Raver joined the cast of Grey's Anatomy. She lives in New York and Los Angeles with her husband, Manu Boyer, and their sons.

Jonathan Soroff: Were you a Grey's Anatomy fan before you were on the show?
Kim Raver: I was having my second kid, and we were getting Lipstick Jungle off the ground, so I didn't have time to watch every episode, but I've always admired all the actors and the writing and Shonda [Rhimes, the creator and executive producer]. I've always thought it was an amazing show.

Favorite leading man?
Denzel Washington. He's my dream, dream, dream (and repeat three more times) actor I'd love to work with. I just have such tremendous respect for him.

Fantasy love-scene partner?
I think I've been pretty fortunate in that respect, between Kiefer [Sutherland] and all the other actors I've worked with. It hasn't quite gotten there with my character and Owen [played by Kevin McKidd], but it's certainly headed in that direction.

How much do you actually know about medicine?
How to put on a Band-Aid? Let's put it this way: When I did my first OR scene, I was like, "Where's the knife?" And they were all like, "It's called a scalpel."

Is Katherine Heigl the prettiest woman you've ever seen?
She's stunning. And a natural beauty.

If you were an insect, what would you be and why?
A grasshopper, because they sing with their legs.

When you signed on for Lipstick Jungle, were you convinced it was going to be a hit?
No. I've been doing TV long enough to know that nothing's ever a sure bet. You've gotta be really in the moment in this business, because everything is so fleeting.

Most exciting thing about acting?
The adrenaline rush when everything clicks and the people you get to work with.

The most boring thing?
The waiting around. There's a lot of downtime, which you have to learn to utilize creatively. I tend to fill it by reading.

Kim Kardashian or Kate Gosselin?
What about them? [Laughs.]

I guess we'll leave it at that.
Please do.

Strangest thing you've ever read about yourself?
For some reason, they always give me the wrong middle name. It's always written as Jane, and that's not my middle name, and I have no idea where they got that.

You speak German. Say something sexy to me.
Meine Mutter ist Deutsche.

What's that mean?
My mother is German.

That's not sexy!
I know. [Laughs.]

Ever have people speaking German in front of you, assuming that you don't know what they're saying?
In French I have. And then I responded in French, and they were embarrassed.

When was the last time you Googled yourself?
That just sounds so wrong. It sounds perverse. But I've been on vacation, so I haven't set eyes on any of that stuff for months.

Are you a Facebook or Twitter person?
Neither, yet, but Greg Grunberg who I just did a movie with is a big Twitterer, so he kind of turned me on to it. Not to sound like an old lady, but I'm getting up the guts to start, especially because I think there's someone pretending to be me on Twitter.

Strangest skill you have on your acting résumé?
It's not on my résumé, but picking up a pencil with my toes. I can pick up things with my feet. Oh, and wire walking. That's a good one.

Who can't do that? So being on Sesame Street as a kid—did that ruin it for you?
No! I had front-row seats. Are you kidding me? It was even more of a wonderland. I mean, it was a little weird when they'd start ripping off the Velcro noses to exchange them for smaller or bigger ones, but my buds were Oscar the Grouch and the Count.

Tell me a secret about Sesame Street.
On the door going from the green room to the stage, it says, "1, 2, 3, Open Sesame!"

Cool! Biggest audition nightmare?
Auditioning for a very, very, very, very big director who basically was just coming on to all the actresses coming in to audition, and it was just creepy. After running out of the room, I ran into another actress who's become a close friend, and we always talk about our experiences in the creepy room. Not that anything happened. But creepy director. Creepy room. Creepy experience.

Is there an actor or director you'd never work with again?
[Laughs.] I can think of one, but I'm not naming names.

Well, what did the person do?
Again, the word creepy comes to mind.

When you win an Oscar, will you thank me in your acceptance speech?
No. [Laughs.] I'm sorry but there's something like 23-and-a-half seconds, so it's gonna have to be my mother, my husband and my family. Although this has been an enjoyable experience. xxx

The Omnivore's Agenda

A HIGH-, MIDDLE- AND LOWBROW GUIDE TO FALL ARTS

September is the coolest month, bringing the college crowd, leaf-peepers and Bryan Rafanelli back to town—and the autumn arts season into full bloom. The theater and Symphony, the opera and ballet beckon again. Hot bands headline Boston clubs and Cambridge bars. Broadway road shows offer family-friendly nights on the town. And television awakens from the coma of summer repeats. ¶ Putting a fresh spin on an old favorite, this year's fall preview offers a panoply of options—from highbrow to lowbrow, the brainy to the zany. We're no snobs. Au contraire, we eagerly anticipated the local rendition of Jersey Shore. But alas, the auditions ballyhooed last spring for Wicked Summah never took place. (What, no Snooki from Saugus?) ¶ So kick back and enjoy. We've done all the hard work for you.

THEATER

High: The new stage adaptation Alice vs. Wonderland adds frabjous costumes, ga-ga songs and good old futterwacken to the classic magical thinking. In her sophomore season as artistic director, Diane Paulus brings "high-octane physical theater" to the A.R.T.

Oct. 8–10 in Davis and Harvard squares. honkfest.org

Low: Faster than you can say messy divorce, it's Our Liza of Perpetual Recovery. The unsinkable chanteuse is back, with a small ensemble.

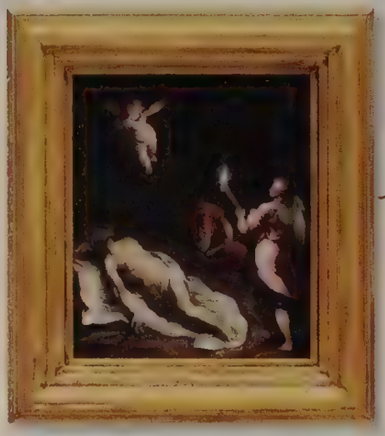
The Good, the Bad and the Ugly

An idiosyncratic tour of the Museum of Fine Arts

By Jonathan Soroff | Photographs by Todd Dionne

William I. Koch Gallery

I'm no art historian. I didn't even take that intro class in college that everyone considered an easy A. But I am opinionated, and I've been visiting the Museum of Fine Arts for more than 40 years. I was dragged there as a child, kicking and screaming or bribed somehow. As an adult, I'll admit there were times I only went because I thought it'd get me laid, but in general, I'm genuinely excited to go. I attend openings whenever possible and pass an occasional Sunday poking around. So I'm presumptuous enough to say I know a few interesting things about it, inconsequential as they may be. Here then, with my apologies to those who treat art museums with a gravity better suited to the Grim Reaper, is my highly idiosyncratic tour of the MFA— unschooled, but perhaps not entirely without merit. →



The Good

We'll start with a few of my favorite things à la Julie Andrews.

John Singer Sargent and I share only two traits—homosexuality and a love of all things Italian—but I can't look at the murals he painted in the rotunda without thinking, "I'd love to have those on the ceiling of my bedroom." Yet they're not my favorite work of his in the museum. That distinction belongs to "The Daughters of Edward Darley Boit"—the large portrait (currently on loan to the Prado) of four rich girls from Boston. One is playing on the floor, another standing primly behind her, and two are in the shadowy background, between a pair of Japanese porcelain vases so large that one of the girls is slumped against it. The urns stood in the Boits' drawing room and are now at the museum, normally displayed next to the painting. What's not on display is their contents when they got there: a century-or-so worth of cigar ends, dance cards and other antiquated, upper-class detritus, all of which is catalogued and preserved somewhere in the interstices of the conservation department. It's not that I particularly want to see it, but it's nice to know that one man's trash truly is another man's treasure.

One man's trash is truly another man's treasure.

"Dead Christ Mourned by Angels"

There are a couple of Old Masters I'm particularly fond of, too, like the 16th-century Italian painting "Dead Christ Mourned by Angels," which is done, unusually, on slate, so that the colors remain remarkably crisp and vivid. What I like most about it, though, is how the museum acquired the painting. The donor, who owned the work for 29 years, supposedly learned its value at one of the free appraisal sessions the museum offers—a sort of rarefied Antiques Roadshow, which a curator I once knew condescendingly called Show and Tell. Instead of selling the work, Mrs. Alice DeNormandie Cope gave it to the museum, satisfied in the knowledge that her name would be on a plaque on the wall, whereas I would've been on the phone to Christy's and Sotheby's faster than you can say "jackrabbit."

Then there's "Dead Christ With Angels," a Rosso Fiorentino masterpiece passed down through generations of Spanish nobility. A college friend of mine was getting his Ph.D. at Harvard when he served as an interpreter for the Italian conservator who restored it. In my recollection, the museum decided to organize an event around its return to the galleries, and various donors loaned things, including another Rosso that was a centerpiece of its owner's private collection. The only problem: The European paintings department said that Rosso hadn't painted the benefactor's prized possession, and they took away the attribution. Call it schadenfreude, but watching that guy go quietly apoplectic at the reception was one of the most entertaining things I've ever seen.

Still, my absolute favorite thing at the MFA is actually a detail of the architecture itself: the lintel over the Huntington Avenue door. The rest of the stonework on the building is beautifully finished, but that one pediment is roughhewn and crude. It looks like it was eroded over eons or eaten away by acid rain, and for years, I viewed this as a compelling enigma. What did architect Guy Lowell mean by it—that art is never finished? Even great works of art eventually crumble? Art can't be perfect?

That's a romantic, and, it turns out, thoroughly mistaken notion. According to MFA archivist and historian Maureen Melton, the stone was set in place for a very large relief sculpture commissioned from an artist named Hugh Cairns. Unfortunately for him, the design he submitted—a head of Athena—was rejected by the Trustees, who described it as "not welcoming."

So it turns out that my favorite work of art at the museum is one that was never made.

The Bad

By bad, I mean naughty, as in verging on the pornographic, which any great art museum, and certainly one as encyclopedic as the MFA, has in spades. There are Japanese prints with coy names like "Ukiyonosuke Meets Ofuji and Osen," or "A Young Man Embracing a Standing Courtesan," which come from a series of erotic prints, and a pair of Etruscan sarcophagi depicting couples coupling for all eternity (by the looks of it, rigor mortis beats

"La Japonaise"

Viagra or Cialis). Other works tend to be less risqué and more idealized, like Rodin's "Eternal Springtime"—a bronze sculpture of two lithe bodies engaged in what resembles a particularly gratifying game of Twister. Poussin's painting of Mars and Venus has a bunch of naked cupids making matchsticks out of Mars' weapons, while he gets diddled by the redheaded goddess of love in an arcadian glade. In short, there's plenty that's prurient at the MFA, but if you want to approach the level of the Robert Mapplethorpe photograph that caused such an unholy uproar at the ICA back in 1990, your best bet is the ancient Greek pots and pans.

Whether you call it a kylix or a drinking cup, the one by Douris with Eros and a youth en flagrante delicto is mild. There's one with a naked man bent over a naked woman and the inscription "Hold still!" However, the real comedy lies in the sterile, academic tone of the informational plaque, which reads, "The setting depicted here suggests a symposium where men were often entertained by prostitutes." The very best of the bad has to be the two-handled cup by Nikosthenes, depicting a no-holds-barred orgy that would make Hugh Hefner blush. Its plaque helpfully explains, "The youth at the far right wields a sandal with sadistic intent... on the wall are a birdcage, a flute case and a dildo."

"Judith With the Head of Holofernes"

All this, in one of the cultural bastions of a city famed for its prudery. Makes you wonder what the Vatican has in storage.

"La Japonaise" is an utter eyesore, and I cringe every time I see it.

The Ugly

What fun is a museum without a few items that you find egregiously ugly?

There are any number of contestants in this category, starting with the more puritanical of the 17th-century Dutch still lifes. I don't really need to see a near-perfect rendering of a tower of rotting fruit or dead animals slumped over the edge of the table to understand that food goes bad. Far worse are some of the allegorical paintings from the Bible, like the ghoulish and incongruous Old Testament scene "Judith With the Head of Holofernes." In both the Italian one by Massimo Stanzione (ca. 1640) and the Dutch one by Jan Massys (ca. 1543), an innocent-looking maiden holds a decapitated head by the hair, but Massys' is especially grotesque because she's inexplicably topless.

However, in my opinion, by far the most heinous thing at the MFA is, surprisingly, by an artist known for the almost anodyne beauty of his work. Monet's "La Japonaise" is absolutely atrocious in every way. Despite its popularity with the public and its central placement in the Impressionist galleries, it's an utter eyesore, and I cringe every time I see it. It's a portrait of the artist's wife, no less, wearing a cheesy blonde wig and a garish red kimono, doing a fan dance. It looks like something you might find at a sushi place in a strip mall. The colors are muddy, poor Madame Monet looks like a five-dollar hooker, and the fans floating higgledy-piggledy on the canvas look embarrassed to be there. If I ran the MFA, that work would be hanging in a dark hallway.

Then again, if I ran the MFA, there might be a wing dedicated to velvet Elvis paintings and dogs playing poker. What's more, I can guarantee you that some grad student, at one point, has painstakingly studied each of the works I've mentioned and would be able to say something much more eloquent and insightful than I have. Then again, that's the beauty of art; everyone's entitled to his own opinion. Or, as the Spanish playwright Lope de Vega said on his deathbed, knowing he wouldn't have to listen to all the flack it'd generate: "All right, then, I'll say it: Dante makes me sick." ✖✖✖

I have an unhealthy obsession with the T.J.Maxx at Fresh Pond. I'm there about once a week. I even have a series on the blog about my Maxxinista finds! Recent purchases include Theory pants, a D&G corset top and some YSL boots.

These shoes were on my list for fall.

I love colorful tights. At my old job, I wore leopard-print tights one day, and I think people were about to pass out.

Playwrights have it easy. Once the writing is done, they don't have to whittle their actors into existence. Blair Thomas, a Chicago-based master puppeteer, not only creates his puppets and set, he composes the script and even the music score for his shows. In his latest production, Hard Headed Heart, at the Charlestown Working Theatre, Thomas presents three pieces: one based on a Federico García Lorca play, one based on a Creole folk song and a finale influenced by a Wallace Stevens poem. Animal Kingdom ★ ½ Glum portent is the order of the day in writer/director David Michod's plodding Sundance prizewinner. A glossy family crime saga, Animal Kingdom is artful to a fault. The film strives so hard for Shakespearean import that it saps the life out of this low-stakes tale of small-time Melbourne hoods. James Frecheville stars as a tediously inexpressive 17-year-old sent to live with his cop-killing uncles. Boredom ensues, as the wayward youth spends the second hour trying to decide if he should rat them out to Australia's only good cop (Guy Pearce). There's not a moment you haven't already seen in countless other, more vivid crime dramas, and the writing is too colorless to revive these dying genre tropes. In lieu of personality, Michod ramps up the funeral atmosphere. It's easy to tell when something is about to happen because the audio drops out and suddenly everybody's moving in slow motion. (At Boston Common, Kendall Square and Waltham Embassy.)

The Concert ★★ ½ Sad-eyed Andrei, once a revered conductor of Russia's Bolshoi Orchestra, is now a disgraced janitor. Thirty years ago he ignored Brezhnev's orders to fire his Jewish musicians, and the ensuing decades haven't been kind. Redemption lurks on the horizon, as one day, while polishing the brass in the Bolshoi director's office, Andrei intercepts an invitation from Paris' Théâtre du Châtelet. It couldn't be that difficult to impersonate an orchestra, right? Why not get the old band back together? Writer/director Radu Mihaileanu skips jauntily over this scenario's implausibilities and piles on the colorful characters and broad stereotypes. There's much discussion of "the Slavic temperament," which in this case is code for drunken boisterousness. Assisted by his bearish, ambulance-driving cellist and a hilarious former KGB stooge, Andrei enlists gypsy fiddlers to forge passports and even persuades a tone-deaf gangster to sponsor the trip. The Concert's pleasures, however minor, come from the old underdog formula, as it's tough not to hope this rag-tag band recaptures lost glory. (At West Newton.)

Dinner for Schmucks ★★ Have wacky hair and false teeth ever made a performer more amusing? Or are they just the affectations of performers trying way too hard? Paul Rudd stars as an up-and-coming financial analyst who, after impressing his haughty boss, is invited to a special dinner party with the executive class. The only catch is he's required to bring an idiot that all these rich jerks can mock during the meal. Initially repulsed, the opportunistic Rudd suddenly sees a promotion in his future after accidentally hitting Steve Carell's loudmouth grotesque with his car. Every performance is hideously overscaled in this film, and director Jay Roach's unfortunate tendency to keep the camera within six inches of their faces underlines the strain. There's a pleading quality to Dinner for Schmucks that's the antithesis of funny, as watching talented people ham it up in pore-exposing close-ups inspires more pity than giggles. Why is Roach so hell-bent on turning such talented actors into prop comics? (At Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

The Expendables ★★★ Some kind of meathead masterpiece, Sylvester Stallone's latest is cinematic junk food of the highest order. It's an old-school, men-on-a-mission movie that's so retro you'll feel like you should be watching it on a beat-up VHS tape. Both shameless and weirdly sincere in its dunderheadedness, the movie is a relic from a crasser, ruder era before irony seeped into pop entertainment and ruined everything. Sly wants to party like it's 1986, when musclemen ruled the multiplexes, women existed only to be rescued and there wasn't a problem that couldn't be solved with a machine gun. Stuff blows up real good, and all the steroids and testosterone almost stain the screen. Stallone is clearly unconcerned with the demands of his so-called story, instead smartly structuring the picture so that it boasts at least one ridiculous action sequence per reel, culminating in a balls-to-the-wall killing spree. The Expendables is defiantly anachronistic and succeeds at being exactly what it wants to be. I haven't had this much fun at the movies all summer. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Get Low ★★ Robert Duvall has made a career out of sounding the depths of that cuddly, incorrigible heart of darkness lurking just beneath the Mason-Dixon Line, and Get Low director Aaron Schneider trades on this shamelessly. The former Boo Radley stars as a Depression-era boogeyman who returns after 40 years in the woods with a giant wad of rumpled "hermit-money," determined to stage his own funeral. The only catch is that he wants to be around for the proceedings. Thank God then for Bill Murray, wryly playing a transplanted Chicago mortician with a penchant for top-coats and a tendency toward drink. The characterization in

MAKING IT WORK

Drew Barrymore's latest leaves the standard rom-com behind.

Going the Distance ★★½
Starring Drew Barrymore, Justin Long, Charlie Day, Christina Applegate, Jason Sudeikis, Jim Gaffigan and Ron Livingston. Written by Geoff LaTulippe. Directed by Nanette Burstein. At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.

IN THE CESSPOOL OF MODERN romantic comedy, littered as it is with grim, misogynistic vehicles for the unappealing likes of Jennifer Aniston, Kate Hudson and Katherine Heigl, a flawed but ultimately adequate film like Going the Distance feels like a masterwork. A so-called "chick flick" that doesn't hate women and won't make you want to gouge your eyes out? Stop the presses!

Borrowing more from Judd Apatow's sentimental gross-outs than, say, 27 Dresses, Going the Distance stars an irresistible Drew Barrymore as the oldest intern in the history of newspapers, desperately trying to restart a career after wasting too many years with all the wrong guys. "My timeline is off," she explains more than once, which might be the filmmakers' attempt to justify a 35-year-old still living like a college student with a fondness for bong rips, black-out benders and one-night stands.

They need not have bothered, since Barrymore is simply adorable. The more she cusses, drinks and stuffs her face with buffalo wings, the more appealing she becomes. Freed from the prissy confines of most rom-com leads, she's a potty-mouthed hard-partier who isn't afraid to admit that she enjoys sex. It's impossible to imagine uptight Us Weekly drones like Aniston or Heigl indulging in the kind of giddy, stoned lasciviousness that Barrymore gets away with here. She carries the movie on lusty giggles and F-bombs.

The catch is, a mere six weeks before heading back to Stanford to finally finish that whole education thing, Barrymore falls for Justin Long's slacker layabout. I've never been a big fan of the ubiquitous Mac pitchman. He's got a clean, audience-friendly veneer that always makes it seem like he's selling toothpaste. To its credit, Going the Distance tries to rough up Long's polish, casting him as a caddish record-company up-and-comer with raunchy roommates and a lazy streak a mile long.

Once Barrymore heads back to California, Geoff LaTulippe's screenplay digs into just how rotten long-distance relationships can be. Even with modern technology giving us Skype and unlimited calling plans, it's still a confusing half-romance that all the weekend visits and awkward stabs at phone sex can't quite normalize. Without the day-to-day aspects of regular couple-dom, Barrymore and Long struggle to hold things together and eke out their career paths in an unforgiving job market.

In the wish-fulfillment fantasia of romantic comedy, it's refreshing to see a movie acknowledge that full-time gigs in the newspaper and record industries are a little hard to come by. Going the Distance will never be mistaken for gritty realism, but in a genre where money is normally never an object, it's also refreshing to see folks in crappy apartments and seedy bars, unable to afford the luxury that such tales often demand. (On their big night out, Long takes Barrymore to a restaurant with "cloth napkins!")

In keeping with the Apatow school of comedy, Long has a couple of wacky roommates serving as a Greek chorus. SNL's Jason Sudeikis wears a Burt Reynolds moustache and spends most of his time hunting for cougars, while It's Always Sunny in Philadelphia's Charlie Day gets a Galifianakis-esque breakout role, dispensing wisdom and filth in his incongruously high-pitched voice. Day even gets away with playing an entire semi-dramatic scene while seated on the toilet. He's passed his big-screen audition.

Christina Applegate plays Barrymore's hectoring, harridan sister. The role is a throwaway (the kind of thing Apatow would write for wife Leslie Mann if they were fighting that day), and yet she still finds a couple of unexpected contours. It's always clear that her never-ending blurring of profanity comes from somewhere genuinely caring, and she sells the script's most dramatic interaction with subtle aplomb. We need to see more of her in movies.

The traditional rom-com formula eventually takes over, and Going the Distance finds a solution to the geographical dilemma that doesn't quite ring true. And I'm still not sure I can buy Justin Long in a role more suited for Seth Rogen, but at least he's trying to scuff up his image and play some scenes that are hardly flattering.

But in the end it's Barrymore's movie. Making dumb decisions and blundering her way into hard-won happiness, it's frankly impossible not to root for this gal. She handles the movie's filthiest material with grace, even selling an unprintable oral-sex monologue with effervescent delight.

After belatedly catching up with Barrymore's rousing, poignant directorial debut Whip It, I'm starting to think she can do anything. ✖✖✖

the movie is what works, with odd details that inform their backgrounds. But Schneider seems to see it otherwise, ramping up the melodrama for a shocking revelation that is neither shocking nor revelatory. Overdirecting in an amateur fashion, he hard-sells a quaint story to the point where a humble little movie feels like it's constantly puffing out its chest. (At Coolidge Corner, Kendall Square, West Newton and in the suburbs.)

The Girl Who Played With Fire ★★ This spring's surprise art-house smash The Girl With the Dragon Tattoo didn't do much for me, but I can understand its appeal. Based on the first book of Swede Stieg Larsson's best-selling trilogy, the film spiced up hoary CBS procedural tropes with dashes of tawdry transgression and chic exoticism. It was like an episode of Cold Case, but with subtitles, facial piercings and rape. The Girl Who Played With Fire, alas, is one of those sad sequels that removes everything anyone might've enjoyed in the original. Noomi Rapace's iconic damaged hacker Lisbeth Salander is framed for murder, and only her beloved, beleaguered journalist Mikael Blomkvist believes she's innocent. Cripplingly, the film commits the Jewel of the Nile sequel sin of keeping the two characters we came to see apart for the entire running time. Meager as Dragon Tattoo's pleasures were, the two leads worked well together. This time, not a single word is exchanged between them. Occasional e-mails just don't cut it, chemistry-wise. (At Kendall Square, West Newton and in the suburbs.)

Grown Ups ★ Last year Adam Sandler gave the bravest, most revealing performance of his career, as a troubled, deeply unlikable comedian in Judd Apatow's underrated Funny People. As happens whenever Sandler ventures outside his comfort zone (Punch-Drunk Love, Spanglish) the audience recoiled, and now we must suffer another lazy retreat back to formula crap. The maudlin, sloppy and shockingly unfunny Grown Ups teams Sandler with pals Kevin James, Chris Rock, David Spade and Rob Schneider as childhood buddies reuniting for a weekend at a New England lake house. There's a screenplay credited to Sandler and Fred Wolf, but it feels more like a collection of pious speeches about old-fashioned family values recited over sappy music cues, while former Saturday Night Live cast members halfheartedly ad-lib and try not to obscure the product placement. The comic's Happy Madison company has produced some slapdash features in the past, but particularly in light of Funny People's brilliance, Grown Ups feels like their lamest effort to date. (In the suburbs.)

Inception ★★★ ½ Ever since his art-house smash Memento, writer/director Christopher Nolan has been obsessed with smashing up the syntax of conventional thrillers. Inception is the kind of pet project that could only happen in the wake of The Dark Knight, as Nolan scored a couple hundred million dollars by helming one of the biggest blockbusters of all time. Inception is an expansive, expensive brain-bender rooted in genre satisfactions; half Solaris, half The Matrix. Leonardo DiCaprio stars as a sullen corporate espionage agent slinking around Kyoto stealing valuable information by infiltrating people's dreams. Cleverly layered, the movie jumbles four separate realities into continuous sequences, as action scenes happen simultaneously across different dimensions but with the same characters. It's a huge movie full of meaty ideas, even when the backbreaking ambition begins to feel like a grind. (At the Aquarium, Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

The Weinstein Company

An Inconvenient Truth

War and Conflict Amir Bar-Lev's Tillman Story documents Pat Tillman's family as they seek answers from the government on the true circumstances of his death.

The Kids Are All Right ★★★ ½ Simply delightful. Director/cowriter Lisa Cholodenko's family farce stars Annette Bening and Julianne Moore as lesbian helicopter moms flummoxed by their kids' latching on to their hapless, sperm donor dad. Played with no shortage of comic brilliance by Mark Ruffalo, he's a bare-chested, groovy organic farmer with a hankering for instant gratification and a penchant for phrases like, "Right on." Complications ensue. Gently ribbing certain Whole Foods lifestyle choices that'll be familiar to anybody from California or Cambridge, The Kids Are All Right has a warm, randy spirit, which embraces these characters not in spite of, but because of their imperfections. Moore, in particular, hasn't been allowed to cut loose like this in eons. She's a lost New Age girl trying to get her groove back, while Bening's tightly wound wine aficionado scores all the haymaker put-downs. Cholodenko's last film was 2002's wonderful Laurel Canyon, and Kids hits the same raunchy comedic heights. In Cholodenko's world, middle age is a funny and sexy place to be. (At Coolidge Corner, Kendall Square, Stuart Street Playhouse and in the suburbs.)

Mesrine: Killer Instinct ★★ ½ The first half of director Jean-Francois Richet's two-part biopic (the second hits screens next month) stars great scenery-chewer Vincent Cassel as France's most notorious bank robber/kidnapper/cold-blooded killer. Based on Jacques Mesrine's autobiography, the movie has bad attitude to burn. After developing his disdain for human life while stationed in Algeria, the sneering protagonist cuts a wide swath of crime across several countries, taking on everybody from the Mafia to the Quebec prison system. Cassel's a mesmerizing firebrand, kneecapping and pistol-whipping at the drop of a hat. There's also a delicious supporting turn from Gerard Depardieu as a sinister mob boss with no illusions about where this game is headed. Unfortunately, Killer Instinct attempts to cover too much too quickly. The movie leapfrogs from one badass set-piece to another, skimming decades without enough connectivity to hold the story together. Mesrine's partner-in-crime Jeanne (Cécile de France) doesn't even arrive until halfway through the movie, so their affair remains underdeveloped. It's just a string of nifty anecdotes. (At Kendall Square and Waltham Embassy.)

The Other Guys ★★★ Every bit the movie Kevin Smith's Cop Out desperately wanted to be, Will Ferrell's fourth collaboration with his Anchorman director Adam McKay is another take on the oft-parodied milieu of 1980s mismatched buddy pictures. Except unlike Cop Out, this film has actual laughs. Ferrell tones it down and actually acts for a change, playing a forensic accountant stranded on desk duty. Supercops Samuel L. Jackson and Dwayne Johnson get all the glory, destroying entire city blocks chasing down pot dealers, while Ferrell and his frustrated partner, Mark Wahlberg, chase down a much more insidious band of Wall Street swindlers. Even at his most restrained, Ferrell's mugging can grow tiresome. Good thing Wahlberg plays all this nonsense totally straight. He takes the role so seriously, you'd think he was up for another Academy Award. Marky Mark huffs and puffs as if nobody told him he was in a comedy. His reaction shots are better than any of the jokes. Nobody plays exasperation better. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Piranha 3D ★★ 1 / 2 Much to the chagrin of self-described visionary James Cameron (who, coincidentally, helmed 1981's Piranha 2: The Spawning), director Alexandre Aja's craptacular opus applies all the advances of modern 3-D technology to reach the heights of schlocky, drive-in garbage. From the opening scene, in which Richard Dreyfuss reprises his iconic Jaws role and gets eaten by prehistoric fish, this is a picture that embraces its tackiness. Elisabeth Shue gamely keeps a straight face as sheriff of an Arizona resort town inundated with college students on spring break. An outbreak of homicidal aquatic creatures puts a dent in all the wet T-shirt contests, disappointing poor Jerry O'Connell, who's trying to film some Girls Gone Wild–esque videos while all the talent is getting chomped in half. It's a kick to watch dimwit frat boys and coed floozies buying it in the most graphic ways imaginable. In fact, Pirahna 3D's showstopping centerpiece ramps up the carnage to such jaw-dropping levels that it's a letdown when the movie circles back to some semblance of a story. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Salt ★★★ We've come to that point in blockbuster season when simple competence feels like something remarkable. Salt stars Angelina Jolie as a poker-faced CIA analyst outed as a Russian spy by a mouth-breathing defector. Is she or isn't she? It's a question you ponder when studying Jolie's brusque, Sphinx-like performance, as the role slyly takes advantage of her odd, non-human characteristics. What's left is a propulsive 90-minute chase sequence, executed in high style by director Phillip Noyce, There Will be Blood cinematographer Robert Elswit and veteran editor Stuart Baird. A technical marvel, Salt is the rare modern action movie that cares enough to orient the viewer during the excitement, using long Steadicam shots and savvy edits where most filmmakers employ chaotic cross-cutting. The retro charms don't just extend to Russian baddies; the whole movie feels like a relic from another age, as commitment to craft trumps CGI bombast. (At Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

Scott Pilgrim vs. the World ★ Based on the beloved comic by Bryan O'Malley, Shaun of the Dead director Edgar Wright's latest has an intriguing hook. In order to date his elusive dream girl (Mary Elizabeth Winstead), simpering Scott Pilgrim (Michael Cera, acting exactly like he always does) must first defeat her League of Evil Exes. Alas, Wright has little interest in the romantic aspects of this fertile idea. He's not really interested in anything besides pandering to his target audience with obscure pop references, protracted CGI fisticuffs and endorsing a worldview that can best be described as limited. It's like Juno for adolescent boys, at every turn reminding the teenage fans that they're smarter and better than everybody else around them. The moral of the movie is that it's OK to be an unfaithful, socially awkward, couch-surfing loser with nothing to offer. There's no coming-of-age here, just something deeply sad. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

Shrek Forever After ★ ½ I can't believe I've sat through four Shrek movies. The things I do for you people! With its bare-bones animation—the empty backgrounds bearing the distinct stink of a direct-to-DVD sequel—this latest desultory slog attempts to reboot the series by positing an It's a Wonderful Life scenario. Mike Myers' charmless ogre gets fed up with all the burping, farting and pooping by his babies and longs for the more solitary existence of his old, undomesticated life. Dastardly Rumpelstiltskin (voiced by in-house animator Walt Dohrn, allowing you to hear cost-cutting measures in full effect) shows the titular ogre what life would be like were he never born, sending him off to wander around a blighted, dystopian Far Far Away. Shrek has to meet everybody all over again, an implicit acknowledgment that there's nowhere else to go with these characters except to start the entire series over from scratch. (In the suburbs.)

Takers ★ Making a brief pit stop in the theaters on its way to Redbox kiosks, this comically derivative cops-and-robbers tale is a vanity project for producers/stars/felons Chris Brown and Tip "T.I." Harris. The wannabe music moguls cast themselves in a blatant knockoff of Michael Mann's Heat, borrowing the sleek suits and epic shootouts like a couple of little boys playing dress-up. The ridiculously overqualified Idris Elba (best known as Stringer Bell from HBO's The Wire) stars as the cool, calculating leader of a heist crew angling for one last score before retirement. Matt Dillon plays a cop-on-the-edge, and perhaps the only L.A.P.D detective allowed to walk around the office in his undershirt. T.I.'s rogue ex-con gets out of jail with a "foolproof" armored car job, and everybody strikes dramatic poses against the glossy cinematography. Lacking a single original moment, the movie regurgitates massive chunks of True Romance and Mann's oeuvre. But Takers does manage to answer one question: How can you make Hayden Christensen even more annoying? Put him in a hipster fedora. (At Boston Common, Fenway and in the suburbs.)

The Tillman Story ★★★ Pat Tillman turned down a multimillion-dollar NFL contract to enlist in the army and serve his country. His sacrifice was rewarded with distortion, demagoguery and a chain of lies snaking up through the top levels of command. Killed by friendly fire in an accident the Bush administration sold as an act of valor, Tillman became an easy symbol for a government trying to foist an unpopular war on a weary public. But Tillman's loved ones wouldn't stand for that. Amir Bar-Lev's rousing, sometimes shocking documentary follows the Tillman family as they struggle through mountains of red tape and bureaucratic doublespeak to knock down the military's manufactured narratives in search of the truth. This is an angry film, but righteously so. The complex and brooding Tillman was used as a poster boy for a cause he'd lost faith in, and this documentary feels true to his restless, questioning spirit. (At Kendall Square.)

Toy Story 3 ★★★★ So this year's summer blockbuster for adults turns out to be a contemplation of mortality and obsolescence starring a bunch of animated plastic toys. You might reasonably wonder if we critics ever get bored writing love letters to Pixar, especially when it comes to a long-delayed sequel that on the surface appears to be geared toward audience familiarity and 3-D price-gouging gimmicks. Yet these sons of bitches have done it again. Tom Hanks' cowboy Woody and Tim Allen's career-redeeming Buzz Lightyear find themselves put out to pasture once young Andy heads off to college. They're confined to a shabby daycare center that carries eerie echoes of senior-citizen homes across the land. What follows is a rousing jailbreak adventure with a tragic undertow, tackling serious questions of death and abandonment in a mature manner that would make Ingmar Bergman proud, if only he'd played with dolls. This is a treasure. (At Boston Common and in the suburbs.)

The Twilight Saga: Eclipse ★★ Probably as good as any movie based on a Stephenie Meyer novel can be, Eclipse continues the mopey saga of sparkly vampires, shirtless werewolves and a heroine so vapid that in terms of toxic female characterizations she makes Carrie Bradshaw seem generous and self-aware. The new addition here is directorial competence, something the first two features sorely lacked. Filmmaker David Slade previously helmed the pedophile's nightmare Hard Candy and a very different vampire picture called 30 Days of Night. Also, stuff actually happens this time. There's a rascally pack of newborn vampires tearing up the Pacific Northwest, and the film picks up steam when it strays from the Hot Topic teen angst and charts an uneasy alliance between the vampires and werewolves against their common enemies. Slade's got visual chops to burn and shoots Robert Pattinson's fey dreamboat Edward and Kristen Stewart's petulant twit Bella in romanticized, wide-screen close-ups. But in the end it's still a Twilight movie, which means queasy sexual politics, rancid dialogue and terrible lead performances. (In the suburbs.)

WOO-HOO!

Pavement plays Agganis Arena on Sept. 18.

Indie-rock icon Pavement breaks quarantine with idiosyncrasies intact.

BOB NASTANOVICH IS OFF-track. For the past decade, he has kept busy in the horse-racing industry as a thoroughbred owner and statistician. Now he's globe-trotting again with Pavement, the seminal '90s indie-rock band that beat the odds for a reunion.

"It wasn't too frequently discussed," Nastanovich says of the reunion idea, speaking from a Chicago airport terminal before heading for shows in Japan. "When people [in the band] would talk to each other over the last 10 or so years, it's been brought up as sort of a hopeful possibility."

The least-hopeful holdout was Pavement guiding force Stephen Malkmus, who dissolved the group in 1999 and moved on to his current band the Jicks and parenthood. But with urging from his booking agent, Malkmus put aside the time to get Pavement back on the road and contacted other members.

Nastanovich, guitarist Scott "Spiral Stairs" Kannberg, bassist Mark Ibold (now a member of Sonic Youth) and drummer Steve West have pursued other musical projects, but all embraced the plan. "The most refreshing aspect to this year is that I didn't spend that much time over the last 10 years listening to Pavement, so I've really enjoyed hearing the music again," says Nastanovich, who provides percussion, keyboard and backup vocals. "The main reason that it's been easy is that I like the songs so much."

He's not the only one, although Pavement generated more critical acclaim than record sales. The group peaked commercially in 1994 with Crooked Rain, Crooked Rain, sporting the MTV hit "Cut Your Hair." The album joined Pavement's 1992 rough-cut masterpiece Slanted and Enchanted on Rolling Stone magazine's 2003 list of the 500 greatest albums of all time, and both earned expanded-reissue treatment along with 1997's underrated gem Brighten the Corners.

The constant was Pavement's casual but influential collision of styles (bridging lo-fi garage rock, post-punk and prog-rock) and Malkmus' abstract, laconic verse, which was often as musical as his serpentine guitar lines. "He was a little more adventurous than the rest of us," says Nastanovich, citing his ex–University of Virginia classmate's interest in the Swell Maps and Captain Beefheart. "We were all pretty straightforward punk and grunge."

After post-college travels to the Middle East, Malkmus returned to his hometown of Stockton, Calif., and launched Pavement with high-school friend Kannberg and drummer Gary Young, who lost his welcome with erratic behavior.

"In the first few years, my role was basically to prop [Gary] up, and when he was impossible to prop up, I was essentially just there to keep time," Nastanovich says. "When he quit, I really didn't know what I was going to do." But in addition to finding a groove with new drummer and old friend West, he adopted a new role—"helping Stephen's voice out by taking more of his harsher singing parts so he doesn't shred his vocal cords." What about his own? "I can shred my vocal cords no problem, 'cause I can't sing anyway," says Nastanovich, whose exhortations supposedly inspired the "Woo-hoo!" in Blur's Pavement-influenced "Song 2."

"What I represent in the band is someone who's very happy to be there, and people look at me [and say], 'Hey, if that guy's in a band, why can't I be?'" he says. "I enjoy the live audience, and I like to have fun with them and allow the more musical elements of Pavement to concentrate on what they're doing."

Much like new retrospective CD Quarantine the Past, Pavement's current tour features a broad sampling of songs from throughout the band's history. "Audiences are overwhelmingly acceptive," Nastanovich says, "[There's] a lot of knowledge of the lyrics, a lot better knowledge than I have, and a lot of singing along."

The one thing missing are new songs. Nastanovich says he doesn't expect them to develop, although he hopes that in coming years, "We'd pop up here and there for the occasional concert.

"Pavement isn't the kind of band that discusses anything until we have to," he adds, noting they're trying to mix up the set lists more by the time the group hits Agganis Arena on Sept. 18.

"Pavement's always been very casual in terms of rehearsing," Nastanovich says. "Stephen plays these songs differently just about every single time, which keeps us all on our toes. So the live songs have always been in a state of flux." ✖✖✖

Prep It Up It's been two years since Vampire Weekend exploded onto the scene with its Afropop guitar riffs and incendiary lyrics declaring, "Hyannisport is a ghetto." The indie prepsters didn't disappoint with their second album, Contra (cover art and lawsuits aside). Even more cheeky and poppy, the new tracks prove the band is more than a college fad. Tie that polo sweater around your shoulders and hear Vampire Weekend with Beach House and Dum Dum Girls on Sept. 12 at Bank of America Pavilion.
